FROM OUR EDITOR

HOMES FOR THE HOLIDAYS

Each year, when judging the Home of the Year, our team enjoys seeing the best homes in the Mountain West submitted by architects and designers across the country. And each year we notice trends in mountain home design—bringing the outdoors in with bifold doors, the ancient technique of shou sugi ban, outrageous ski rooms an Olympic skier would envy and, recently, the resurgence in Scandinavian influence on design.

Scandi-modern, popular in Europe, has made its way to the U.S., and this year's Home of the Year tempers Swiss chalet references with a modernist purity, simplicity and beauty. Architect Larry Pearson says, "We took something historic and gave it a modern overlay," a concept echoed by interior designer Leisa Kolstad with the description, "rustic bones with a modern aesthetic." The result is a home with heart. Interiors are airy, light-filled and modern, yet cozy, with amazing views—a design that will endure for generations. You'll find it on page 132.

Continuing with both "cozy" and "Scandinavian" themes, we visit a new store in Avon, Colorado, Hygge Life (pronounced Hoo-ga), dedicated to the Danish practice of savoring the moment. For gift ideas or to create your own hygge at home, the husband-and-wife owners encourage you to stop, shop and take a moment for yourself in the screen-free coffee shop.

Colorado's Gorsuch family, eponymous with their retail stores, shares their holiday traditions beginning with strapping on snowshoes to cut down a tree, while an artist tells the inspiration behind her line of hand-painted canoe paddles—a wonderful gift. And our holiday gift guide offers over 50 more fabulous items.

Whatever your family traditions, we at Mountain Living wish you a holiday surrounded by people and pets you love—there's no greater gift.

Cheers!

Our contributors share stories from their travels

Wrote "Nurturing a Hygge Life" on page 81

Winter reminds me of years my family rented a house with friends in Crested Butte after Christmas. Our daughter Kara brought her friend Lillie, it was a restorative experience; serene and healing in the way only a Victorian town swaddled in snow can be. It enabled us to step back in time, get goofy on the sledding hill, engage with each other in a way the frenetic days leading up to the holidays in Denver never could. Then, too, something about those blueberry skies on the ski mountain we all called Mount Crumpet from the Grinch story; those stars hanging low enough to touch as we crunched through the snow at night, all but guaranteed a new and better year to come.

AUDREY HALL

During the holiday season in Montana, the sun dips below the horizon well before dinner time. Nights feel like an old friend speaking in a slow, Southern drawl. You find yourself settling into the rhythm of a conversation that will surely go on for hours. The short days are full of long shadows present all day and colorful "magic hours" that seems endless. These qualities are a photographer's dream, but it's the far-reaching nights that make you fall in love with crisp moonlit walks in the pearly landscape and hot drinks by the fire as the skies glow dark cerulean blue.

HIGH TEA Founded in 1759 by Josiah Wedgwood–a fourth-generation potter known for his perfectionist tendencies–Wedgwood produces fine bone china that has adorned the tables of English kings and queens for more than two-and-a-half centuries. But lucky for us, you don't have to be royalty to add the company's luxury dinnerware, flatware and drinkware to your cupboard. On our holiday wish list: The Prestige Pure Gold Collection, a chic tea set that combines Wedgwood's classic fine bone china with hand-painted 22-carat-gold handles, spouts and saucers in a textured reptile-skin pattern. High tea served with a side of bling. Wedgwood Prestige Pure Gold Collection, pieces sold individually, starting at $435; wedgwood.com.

STORY JAMES FARRELL

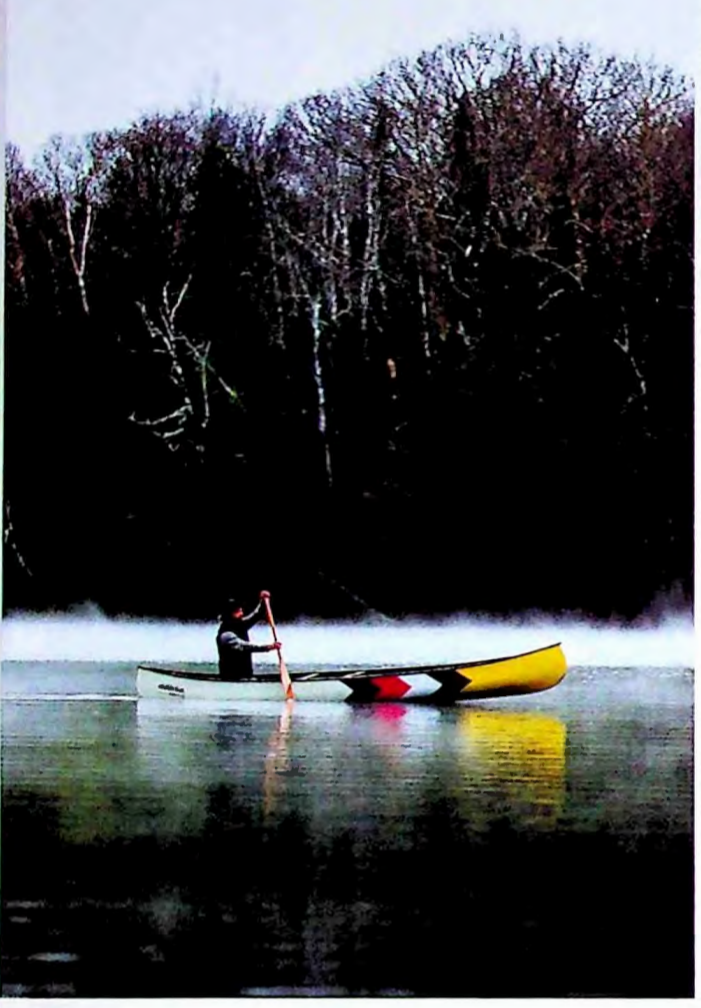
PADDLE YOUR OWN CANOE

ARTISANAL PADDLES PROVIDE A FLAVOR OF THE CANADIAN WILD

Norquay is a passion project, and founder Natasha Wittke puts her heart and soul into each piece, striving for clean lines and organic designs.



Norquay Co. sells canoe paddles, but not just any canoe paddles. Each one is a work of art, crafted by the company's founder, Natasha Wittke. Hand-painted and made from gorgeous cherry wood, the paddles evoke the grandeur of Canadian lakes, pine forests and campfire smoke. Her products ship to homes, restaurants and hotels all over the world. Wherever they go, her patterns and color compositions imbue their surroundings with a sense of rustic adventure.

Norquay's story is a success story, and it's an underdog story—a story of overcoming personal obstacles. Diagnosed at age 4 with Wolff-Parkinson-White syndrome, Wittke underwent a 14-hour heart surgery at age 10 and often felt overexerted as she grew up. But at age 14 she embarked on a transformative canoe trip on the Missinaibi River in Ontario. Wittke and her team (named "Norquay" after a tiny island on Lake Huron) paddled 600 kilometers, including a nine-kilometer portage, in under 30 days. "It was a pinnacle moment," she recalls. "I emerged totally in awe that I could push my body that way." Now she rock climbs, surfs and rides horseback, always searching for the next challenge.

After attending art school Wittke found a career in advertising, but she eventually sought a way to reconnect with her artistic roots. "I designed for myself first," she says, "not for anyone else or to sell." Using canoe >>

Natasha's designs bring a touch of wilderness into your living room, or take the comfort of your home into the wild, like with this hand-painted canoe, in collaboration with Abitibi & Co., and this Canadian Shield blanket.

paddles as a canvas came to her in an "aha" moment. She got to work, drafting 200 designs, most of the collection in production today. Her first 50 paddles sold in two weeks. "And off I was," Wittke says. "Norquay was born."

That was six years ago. Since then the company has expanded to produce Canadian shield blankets, camping apparel and, in collaboration with Abitibi & Co., beautiful canoes.

Kerry Reynolds, an avid canoeist, calls Wittke's paddles "functional art" and says, "Natasha's craftsmanship is second to none." He purchased his first Norquay paddle in 2014 and now owns four. His favorite is titled "Eagle," a sleek ottertail paddle. Like many of Wittke's designs, it features strong symmetry along a central vertical seam. "Maybe," Wittke speculates, "that split down the middle came out subconsciously." It might recall her surgery years back, or suggest a river.

For her, the paddles are emblematic of childhood summers spent canoeing on Lake Huron, and they represent the most recent point in a continuing journey. Now working at Norquay full time, Wittke is busy developing new pieces. She won't reveal any details, but, always looking ahead to the next bend in the river, she's excited for what the future will bring. ○

"I try to pair each paddle with a design that celebrates its unique wood grain," Wittke remarks. "Sometimes I see a paddle and say, 'I'm not painting on that, it's too perfect.'"

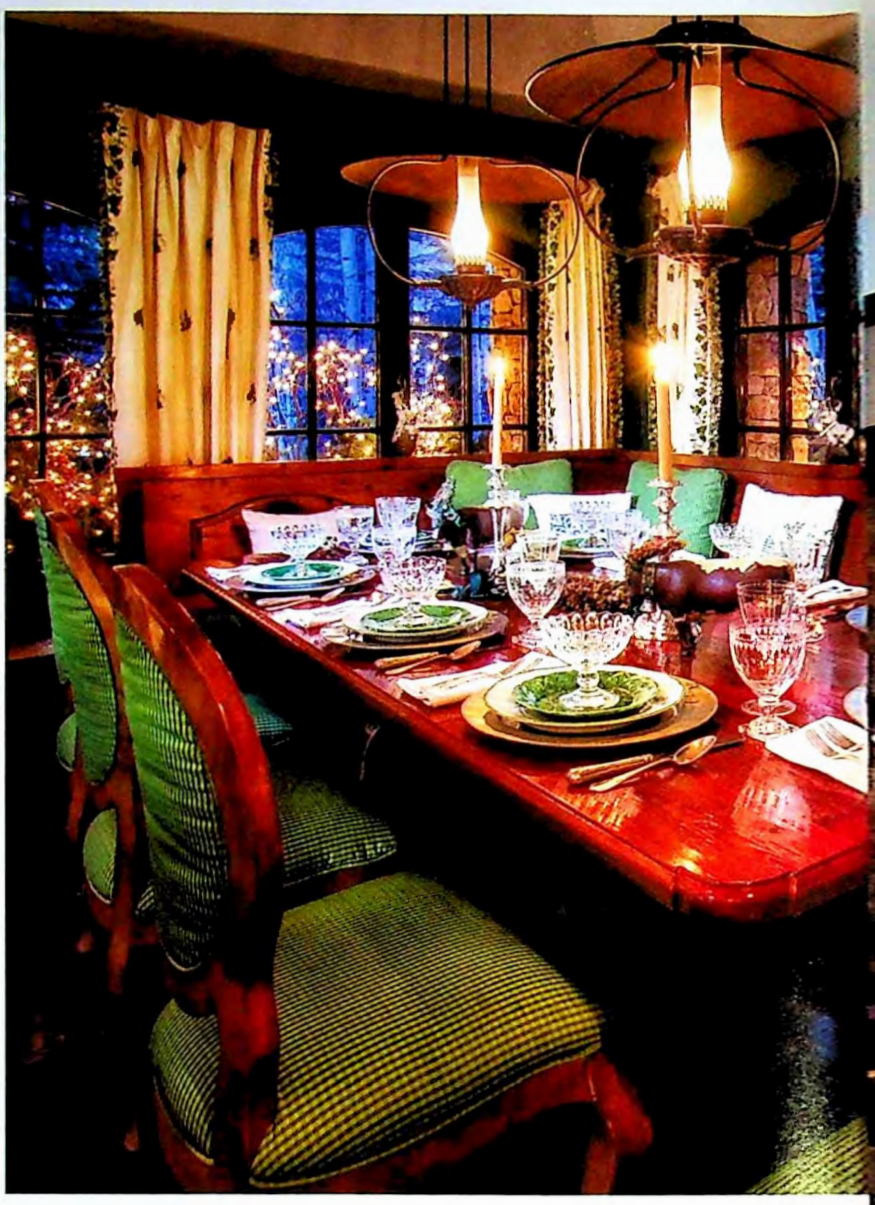
VAIL FAMILY CHRISTMAS

KNOWN FOR THEIR MOUNTAIN RETAIL BRAND, THE GORSUCH FAMILY SHARES THEIR HOLIDAY TRADITIONS

O/P: The serene living oom is anchored by a tall e:shly cut tree. BOTTOM: parkling lights—both slide and out—welcome mily and friends.



Christmas in the Gorsuch household starts with strapping on snowshoes (after buying a tree-cutting permit) and walking into the White River National Forest to find the perfect tree. It is a family activity, with each member scouting for a tree that's tall, full, bushy—and absolutely gorgeous. Spontaneous snowball fights break out while the best tree is chosen, cut and taken home.

Ornaments—some antique, some handmade, but all precious because of the memories they evoke—are unwrapped from their tissue paper. Yards and yards of sparkly white lights are untangled and tested. "Christmas lasts a long time at our house," says Renie Gorsuch. "We put up our tree at Thanksgiving and leave it up until the middle of January."

Renie and David Gorsuch, former Olympic skiers, opened their first eponymous ski, fashion and home store (inspired by Swiss and Austrian ski lodges) in Vail's Clock Tower Building in 1966. "We had no idea how busy our little store was going to be," says Renie. Now married for 59 years, they have three sons, 10 grandchildren and five family-run stores—in Vail, Aspen, Beaver Creek/Avon and Park City. "Because we are in the retail business we are busiest during Christmas holidays, and family celebrations take a little bit more planning," she says.

Son Jeff Gorsuch remembers his childhood Christmases fondly. "Because my brothers and I are so close in age, we grew up really close," he says. In his memory, there is always lots of snow at Christmas. "We built snow forts >> until our fingers were numb, then came in for marshmallows in front of a crackling fire." There were gingerbread houses and the smells of "great food" and waking up Christmas morning to discover new skis or a toy train that really worked.

The toy train now delights a new generation as it chugs through a small Bavarian village at the base of the tall Christmas tree. A second, smaller tree is decorated by the children with paper chains, strings of popcorn and cranberries, cotton-ball Santa Clauses and small plaster handprints brought home from school. Another kid favorite is a hand-carved crèche that, although it holds precious memories for Renie, is put on a low table so it can be arranged and rearranged by grandchildren.

Tradition rules when it comes to Gorsuch holiday meals. Christmas Eve features shrimp salad and oyster stew. Christmas Day breakfast is scrambled eggs with cheese, homemade bread and maple syrup "on everything," says Renie. For dinner, turkey and ham take center stage, along with a frozen fruit salad that Renie's mother made "for 100 years" and dozens of desserts, because "everyone in the house loves to bake."

"We live in a family home, and our lives have always revolved around our family," says Renie. "Gorsuch is a mountain family. ... We belong in the mountains," she adds. Christmas is always a bit chaotic, but in a happy way. "You're always thinking you'll be more organized next year," she says with a smile and a bit of a sigh.

A NEW BOUTIQUE BRINGS HYGGE TO THE MOUNTAINS

NURTURING A HYGGE LIFE

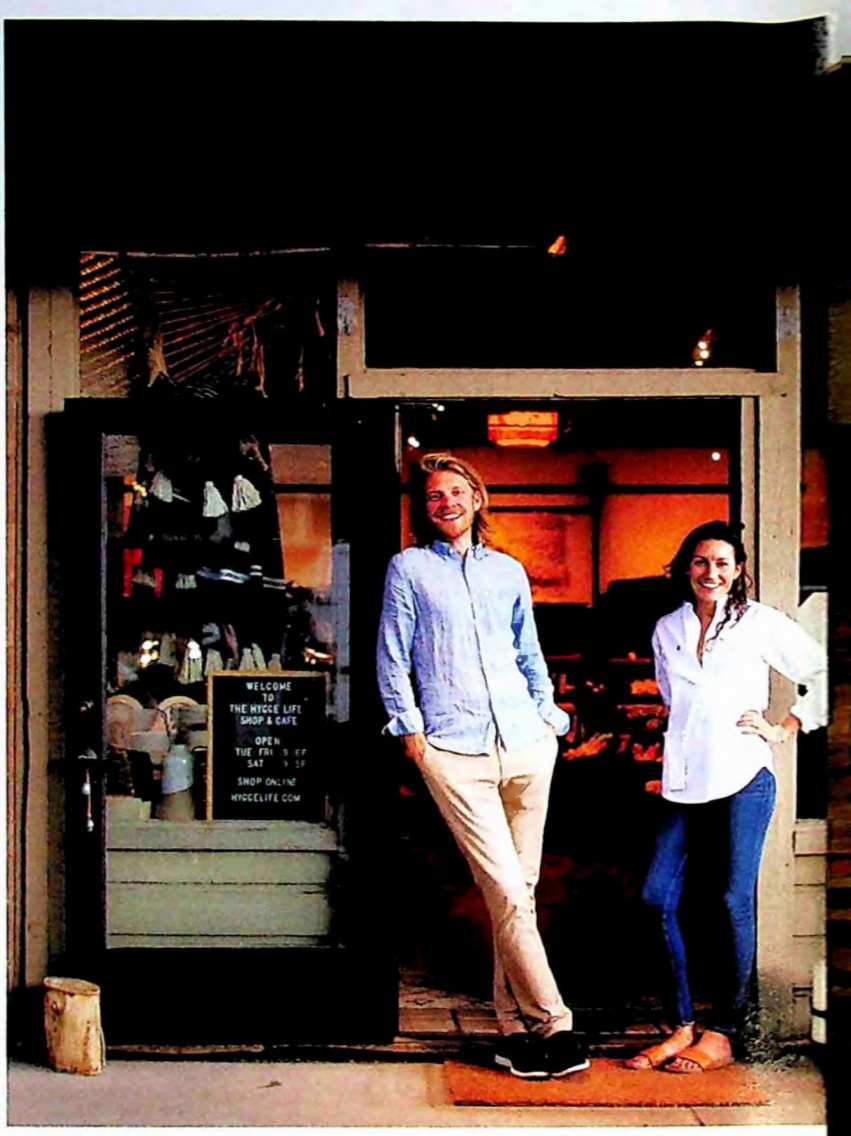
Hygge Life in Avon, Colorado, offers a variety of ideas for incorporating the increasingly popular Danish practice of "hygge," pronounced "hoo-ga," slowing down and savoring each moment.



When Alexandra Gove and Koen van Renswoude met at a Vail ski swap in 2011, they had no idea they would soon embark on a journey that would place them at the forefront of a lifestyle movement. The future owners of Hygge Life home décor store in Avon, Colorado, fell in love that summer while working in the hospitality industry. After Koen returned to his native Amsterdam, they dated long-distance before Gove, raised in Colorado, joined him in 2012.

While van Renswoude completed a master's degree in political science, Gove worked and absorbed Dutch culture. "I loved their ability to slow down and be present," she says. "How cozy and intentional homes and cafes felt."

On a trip to Copenhagen, while touring and admiring local design, she deeply connected with a similar quality. "I read an article about hygge, a cultural practice of cultivating moments of coziness and comfort. It spoke to a part of me that didn't get enough attention. Sparks flew, and I thought—I have to do something with this!"

Gove became captivated with finding products to create hygge spaces. In 2014 the couple fixed up an old camper van and traversed Europe, selling van Renswoude's Dutch pancakes and hygge-inspired toys and textiles at local markets. "Alex kept a blog to inform friends and family about our adventures," he recalls.

Their efforts took on a life of their own, transforming them into hygge pioneers. "Unintentionally, through the blog, it became a hygge story (especially when the trend started in the states)," Gove says, "jumpstarting our business."

The couple stayed in Amsterdam almost two more years while Gove launched a website and online

The owners of Hygge Life have poured their hearts into bringing their passion for hygge to customers, selling intentionally selected vintage and artisan-crafted pieces—from candles, candleholders and toys to sheepskins, linens and kitchenware—that encourage and inspire the creation of thoughtful, comfy, celebratory home spaces.

business selling vintage and artisan-crafted hygge pieces including candleholders, toys, textiles and kitchenware, occasionally returning to Colorado to sell at local markets. They moved back in 2016, continuing to sell at markets and pop-ups before opening their brick-and-click Hygge Life store of thoughtfully selected products.

They recently added an indoor-outdoor, Wi-Fi-free cafe where customers can unplug, savor coffee and experience hygge. They also host dinners with local chefs and musicians in various locations—"old warehouses, churches, schools; the Bread Bar in Silver Plume"—and dream of opening a hotel, shop and cafe in one.

Gove, whose book Dwell, Gather, Be (Blue Star Press) was published this fall, says the couple incorporates hygge into their busy lives, intentionally pausing to nurture and connect. "We take time for coffee, sit on the bench outside and talk with a neighbor. You remember those times at the end of the day."

Van Renswoude agrees. "Hygge helps you put things in perspective. Having that word, hygge, makes you take those moments more, notice and remember them."

HYGGE YOUR HOME
for the Holidays and Year-Round

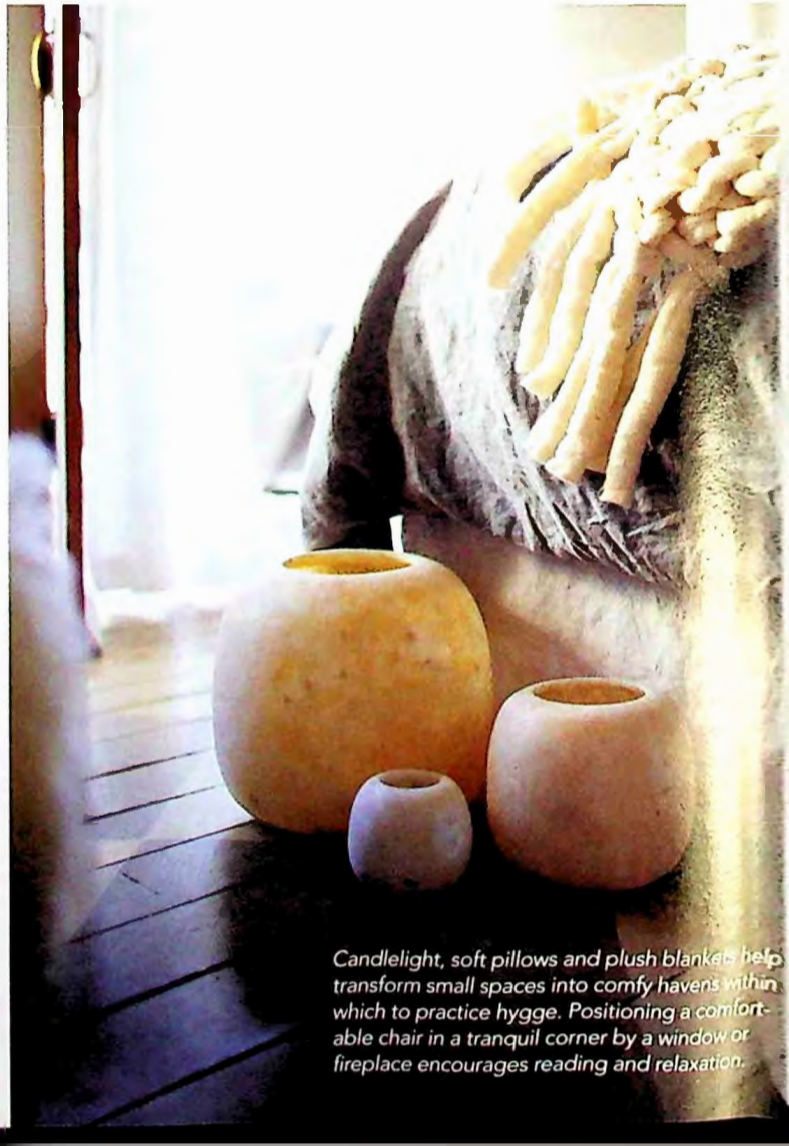
CURATE TOWARD YOUR LIFESTYLE Design toward how you live and what and who you most treasure rather than trends or styles. Make your home reflect you and your family traditions. Enjoy baking Christmas cookies with your kids? Add a stool in the kitchen along with child-friendly utensils.

THINK COZY NOOKS Light candles and transform small spaces into comfy havens. Nestle pillows and blankets in a magic spot near the Christmas tree. Position a comfortable chair in a tranquil corner by a window or fireplace to encourage rest and reading.

HYGGE WHEN ENTERTAINING Use precious family glassware, tableware and candleholders to create ambience and make guests feel especially celebrated. Serve special wines and family dishes and dine by candlelight. Make time for coffee, tea, hot cocoa and conversation.

UNPLUG AND SEIZE THE MOMENT Over the holidays and year-round, embrace hygge by leaving technology at the door. Place a basket at the entryway of your home for devices where they can be plugged into chargers. Make meals and bedrooms technology-free zones.

MAKE EVERY DAY A HYGGE DAY Break out something cherished—glassware, dishes, linens—each day, rather than only on special occasions. Pause to partake in hygge every day.



Candlelight, soft pillows and plush blankets help transform small spaces into comfy havens within which to practice hygge. Positioning a comfortable chair in a tranquil corner by a window or fireplace encourages reading and relaxation.

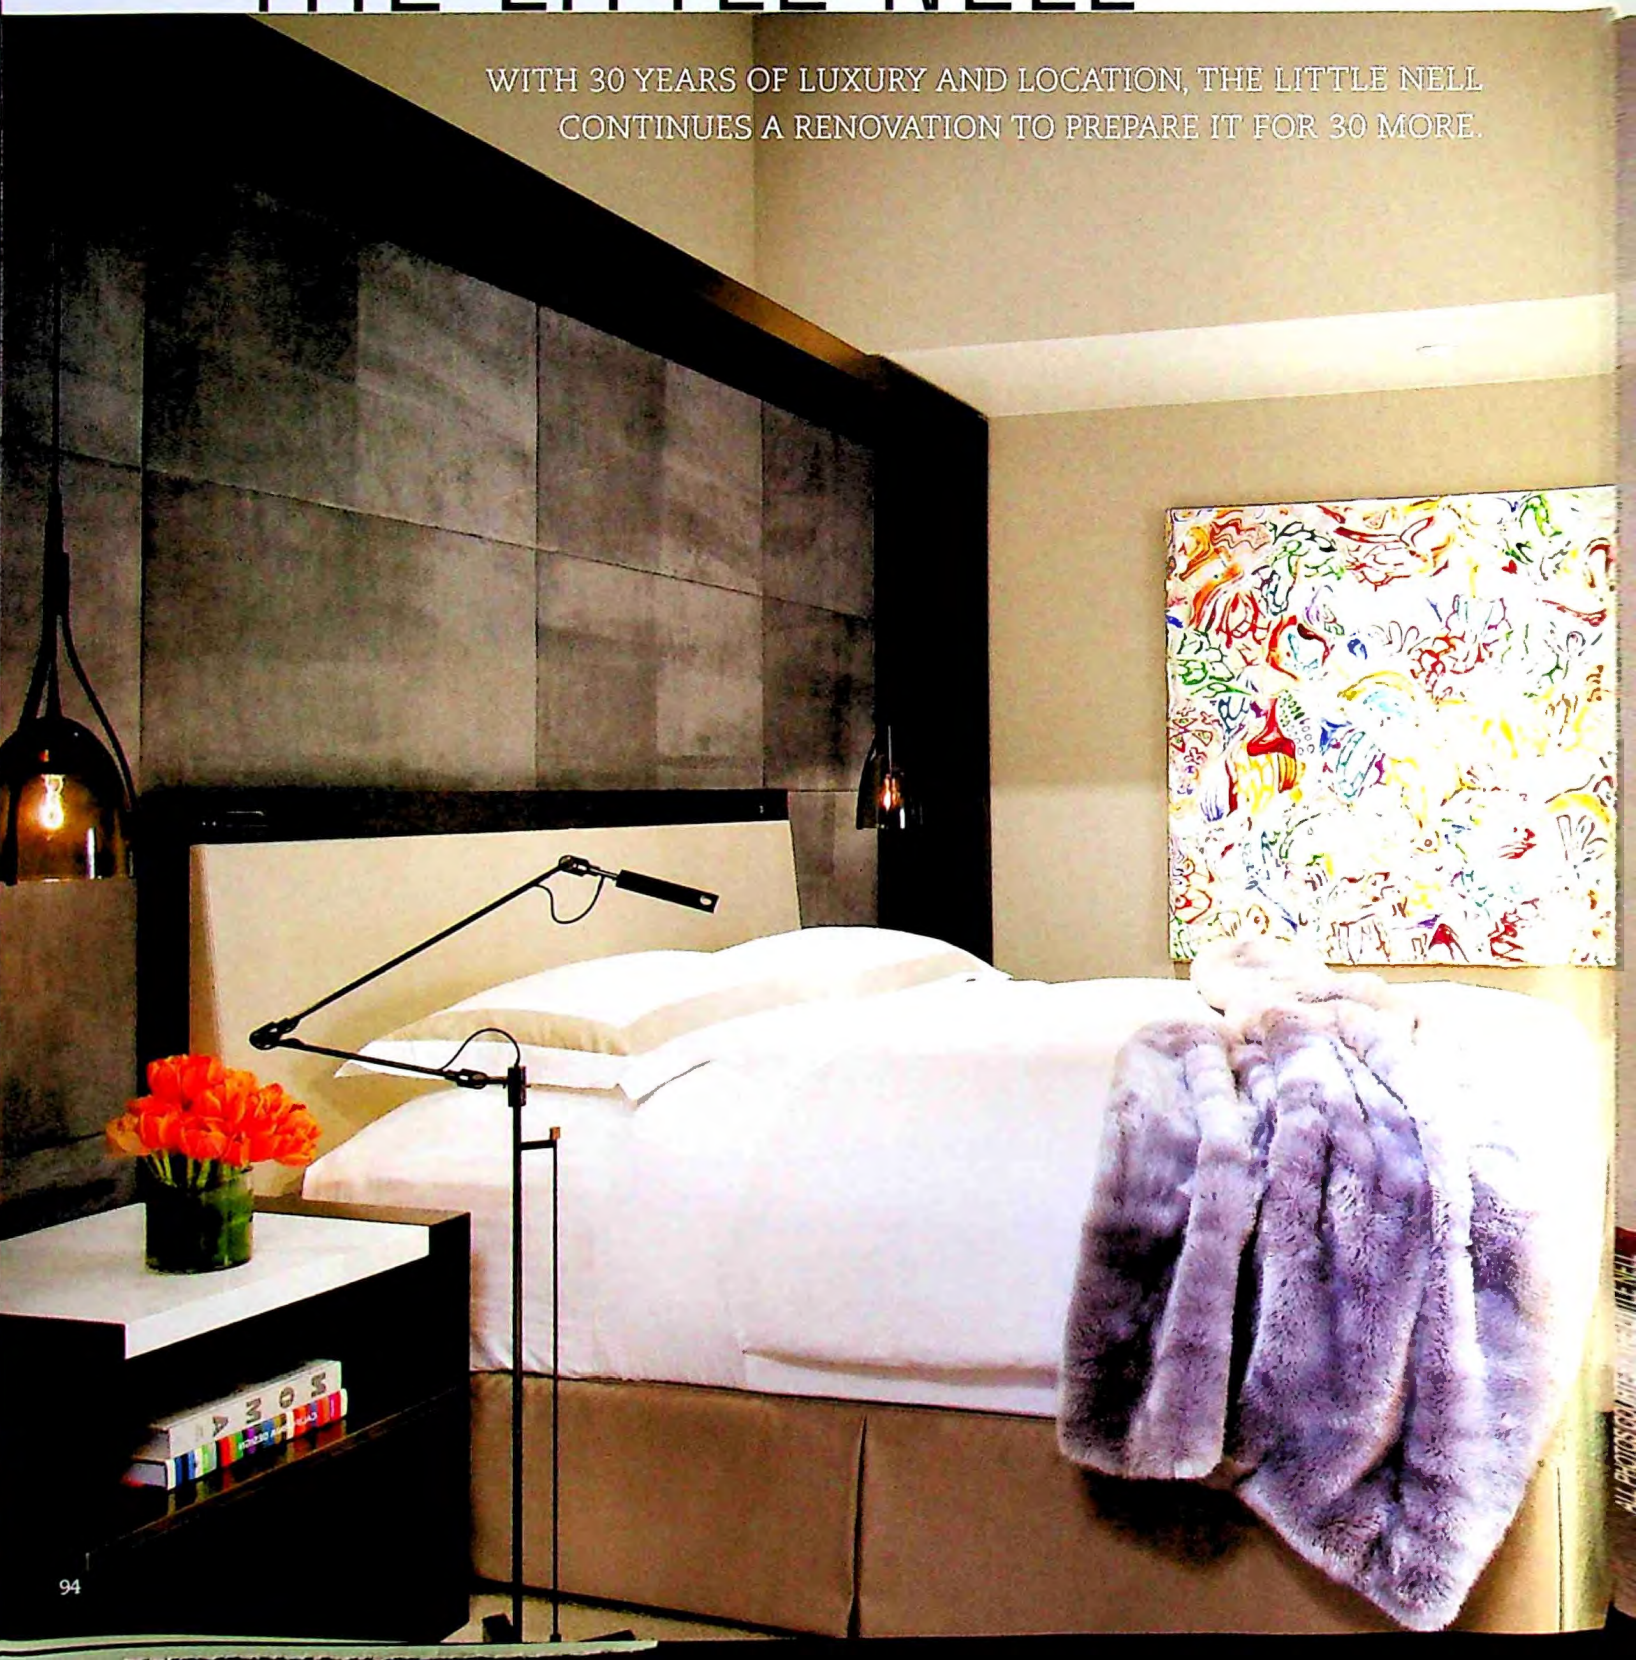
COZY ABODES

TEXT BY DARLA WORDEN AND DEVON MINER

ASPEN, CO

THE LITTLE NELL

WITH 30 YEARS OF LUXURY AND LOCATION, THE LITTLE NELL CONTINUES A RENOVATION TO PREPARE IT FOR 30 MORE.



KNOWN FOR SUPERB GUEST SERVICE AND ELEGANT ACCOMMODATIONS, THE LITTLE NELL enlisted Champalimaud Design of New York in spring 2017 to renovate its guest rooms and junior suites. Contemporary works of art offset the interiors' textured fabrics and palettes of white, blue and gray. The only ski-in, ski-out Five Star, Five Diamond resort in Aspen, the Nell offers balconies and mountain views with most rooms, and all have gas log fireplaces, down-filled sofas or lounge chairs, and spacious bathrooms with a separate tub and shower. In addition, in 2014 renowned residential designer Holly Hunt of Chicago created six specialty suites.

But the resort is not stopping there. Ajax Tavern, known for its apres scene on its sunny patio, received its own refresh last summer. Award-winning Rowland & Broughton Architecture and Interior Design created a new corner entry that delivers guests directly into the bar before they proceed into the dining room with its cozy red leather booths and banquettes.

And as the resort celebrates its 30th year, Champalimaud is now renovating the hotel public spaces including the entry, lobby, living room and Chair 9 bar. The centerpiece of the lobby and living room, the fireplace, has been updated with a dark metal-clad façade. Screens inspired by Harry Bertoia's sound sculptures serve to elegantly break up the open space. The facelift will be completed as the resort celebrates its anniversary with a number of celebrations. If the walls could talk, oh the stones the Little Nell could tell!

SNOWMASS RESORT, KNOWN FOR ITS EXPANSIVE 3,362-ACRE TERRAIN, has long been an insider's favorite ski resort—but until 2018 "there was no there there," as it lacked a robust base village. That year, the $600 million "town square" of Snowmass opened; 10 years in the works, it transformed the base into a lively village with ice-skating in the winter, corn hole in the summer, and the Limelight Hotel at the heart of the action.

The Limelight's vibe is lively—kids and dogs are not only welcome but encouraged—and rooms are large, ranging from 461 to 495 square feet, and luxurious. All rooms come with soft robes and slippers, cozy banquette seating for dining, work or game night; and sumptuous bath products. Location is primo—adjacent to the Elk Camp Gondola—and ski concierge service makes getting from your room to the slopes a breeze. Focusing on making a light ecological impact, from housekeeping practices and cleaning products to organic coffee, the Limelight works to minimize its global footprint and preserve Snowmass's natural environment.

Known for its menu of unique amenities, including a 54-foot faux rock climbing wall on the hotel's facade, perks include an expanded continental breakfast; après ski deals in the Limelight Lounge; live music; adventure activities such as First Tracks, Inside Tracks and Last Tracks; complimentary ice-skating rentals, fat tire bikes and pet-friendly rooms. Bottom line: The Limelight offers luxury accommodations combined with comfortable, casual ambience—if you don't like fun, don't come here.

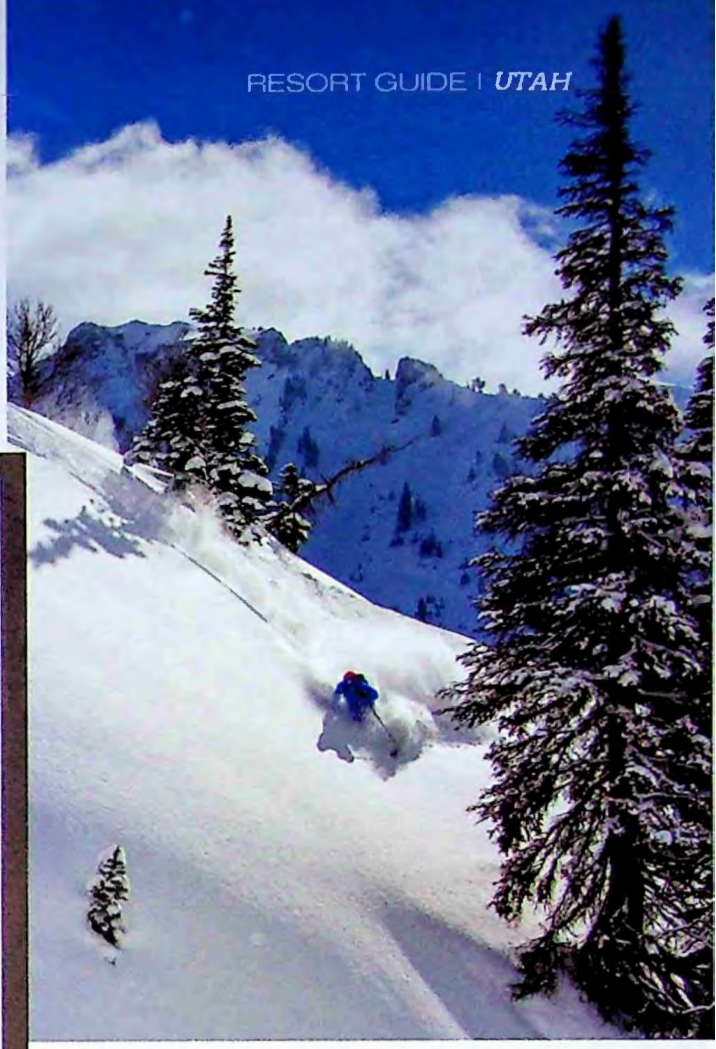
THE SNOWPINE LODGE

TRADITIONAL ALTA MOUNTAIN EMBRACES A NEW ERA WITH THE ADDITION OF UPSCAL



WITH ITS STRAIGHT-TO-THE-SLOPES AND NO-FRILLS MENTALITY, ALTA, UTAH, hasn't changed much since becoming a ski playground in 1938. But in January 2019, the Little Cottonwood Canyon constructed an unprecedented addition: the luxurious Snowpine Lodge, a resort offering 78 pristine rooms, a full-service ski shop and top-tier amenities. Crafted from the oldest standing structure in the former mining town, the building has a long-rooted history as a general store, post office, army barrack and then public shelter before becoming a contemporary-rustic inn. The hotel sits less than a quarter mile from the ski lifts (and one mile from heli-skiing experiences) and touts various modern improvements: globally inspired cuisine at Swen's Restaurant, outdoor heated pools, jetted hot tubs and fire pits that overlook the Wasatch Mountains. From the convenience of location to the warming hygge interior, the hotel provides a high-style gateway back to Alta's main focus—the 2,614 skiable acres that wait beyond the resort

BILLED AS THE WORLD'S ONLY PRIVATE SKI, GOLF AND ADVENTURE COMMUNITY, the Yellowstone Club in Big Sky, Montana, just keeps getting better. The latest expansion, the New Village, encompasses three new buildings, each with amenity spaces on the first floors and residences above. Brayton Hughes Design Studio in San Francisco was charged with respecting the landscape of one of the most beautiful mountain terrains in the world, while creating a fresh and dynamic experience for the sophisticated, well-traveled members of the club.

Each of the new buildings required a unique aesthetic direction to create a sense of a village. Drawing from Montana's rugged landscape, the restaurant design uses raw natural materials, wood textures and soft leathers to create a cozy atmosphere in the 6,600-square-foot space. The new specialty restaurant and bar draw upon the iconic shape of a modern barn—think high ceilings, large wooden doors and dark basalt tile. The property's après ski bar takes inspiration from another regional historical form—an old mine. And the spa draws upon Native American influences with an earth-tone palette and organic shapes to create a soothing atmosphere. At the Yellowstone Club, when it comes to amenities, more is more.

YOTELPAD

TECHNOLOGY MEETS OUTDOOR RECREATION AT CONDO-STYLE YOTELPADS IN MAMMOTH MOUNTAIN

WITH MORE THAN TWO MILLION ANNUAL VISITORS, 400 INCHES of seasonal fresh powder and an 11,053-foot summit, Mammoth Mountain is virtually synonymous with "world-class ski destination." However, the California resort isn't only popular for its winter recreations, it also offers fishing, golfing, intense bike paths and family-friendly hiking excursions in the summer. Yearning to share this lifestyle and 300 days of sunshine with loyal visitors full-time, YOTELPAD was conceived to occupy one of the most desirable spots on the mountain. Assembled by Replay Destinations and set to open winter 2020-21, these condominiums are an efficient yet stylish lodging option, with 156 rooms that are fully furnished, technologically forward "PADs." PAD owners are within walking distance of the gondola, allowing quick access to the 3,500 skiable acres, snowcat tours and extreme terrain park. Interiors are new-age mountain modern rather than traditional kitsch, with innovative features like robot luggage concierges, app-based ski and car valet and Amazon-branded lockers. Only the third property of its kind in the United States, this location will include the first YOTELPAD bar as well as an outdoor yoga section, bocce ball courts and year-round pool.

DESPITE HOLDING THE TITLE FOR MOST SKIABLE ACRES IN THE UNITED STATES, sheep-herding ranch turned ski resort Powder Mountain has flown under the radar as a top destination in the ski community. Roughly 40 minutes away from Salt Lake City, Utah, the landscape boasts 8,464 acres of terrain, a maximum of 1,500 exclusive lift tickets sold per day and, now, a new neighborhood concept available for purchase. The chalet-style properties in the Horizon Neighborhood are the first architect-designed homes on-site and were conceptualized to deliver a sense of community to the quiet ski oasis. Following the natural arches of the mountain, the plot development will include 30 cabins for sale with a cedar-clad exterior, thermally heated concrete floors and panoramic windows for unobstructed views of the vistas. "Intricate yet modest" is the mantra for Canadian design firm MacKay-Lyons Sweetapple Architects, known for using surrounding topography as its architectural muse. Coming in four different lodging styles (the two-bedroom Capella, three-bedroom Indus and Vega and the four-bedroom Lyra), the village is designed for environmentally conscious homeowners to guarantee the conservation of the mountain's natural integrity.

TELLURIDE SPOTLIGHT

BY DEVON MINER

WITH A POPULATION OF UNDER 2,500 PEOPLE, Telluride, Colorado is distinctly one of the smallest ski-town communities in the West. Other key distinctions that have attracted visitors and residents for years? Deep roots in mining town history, old Victorian charm, and world-class skiing, just to name a few.

The development of European-chic Mountain Village in 1981 paved the way for Telluride to not only appeal to the ski-enthusiast looking for an authentic community, but a destination for those in search of ultimate luxury--and design, including mega celebrities like Oprah Winfrey and Tom Cruise. And for local Telluride architects and designers, this development and expansion meant a shift from restrictive, historical remodels to creative, mountain modern custom-homes.

While the sky-scraping canyon walls surrounding Telluride stand still over time, it has been made clear that the influence the area has on designers is ever-evolving. From hand-carved steel logs made to look like real parts of a tree trunk, to the well-thought out placement of natural materials throughout a home, Telluride's design community never seem to struggle with the convergence of Telluride's natural beauty into their work.

On the following pages, you'll meet some of Telluride's most exciting designers and artisans who share with us a deep love for their town--and their work truly testifies to that.

DESIGN WITH PURPOSE

Architect Peter B. Lundeen of FUSE ARCHITECTURE + INTERIOR shares his passion for delivering top-notch design and functionality with every kind of client in mind.

What services does your firm provide to customers?

OUR INTENTION in creating FUSE Architecture + Interior was to fuse the practices of architecture and interior design to remove the gap between the two disciplines. We provide an efficient, value-added design service that creates interior and exterior solutions that are cohesive and seamless. Bringing together accomplished designers with focused skillsets allows us to craft a unique approach for each project.

What inspires you most?

WE LOVE THE PROCESS of creating the best experience for our clients. Architecture and interior design are the only arts that people inhabit. The art is in crafting spaces that accentuate living.

Is there a certain style you gravitate towards in your designs?

WE WORK CLOSELY with our clients, their ideas and the location to make sure that each design solution is unique in character and feel as well as compatible with the surrounding environment. No matter if the style is contemporary, rustic, urban or tropical, our designs are open and light with a comfortable flow of spaces and simple, clean lines. We strive to create a sense of serenity in our designs as a respite from everyday hustle and bustle.

A LUXURIOUS CAMPFIRE

Meet Keith D'Angelo, sculptor-turned-business-owner of COLORADO CUSTOM FIRE PITS, as he brings his artistic eye to outdoor décor with custom-made fire pits.

Tell us about your custom fire pits and how they fit into a home.

WE FEATURE artistically handcrafted steel log sets for propane and natural gas fire pits. Our Telluride, Colorado crafted fire pits fit perfectly into any home to create a space for friends and family to gather and enjoy the nostalgia that comes with sitting around the fire. Not only do they look beautiful, but they function extremely well, heating the space around the fire pit resulting in an authentic fire-feel.

Your fire pits are really low maintenance; what are other benefits that homeowners love?

OUR FIRE PITS OFFER our customers the ability to enjoy a Colorado campfire without the smoke or smell that comes with a wood-fueled fire. Homeowners also love both the form and function of our long-lasting steel log sets. They can admire the beauty and craftsmanship of the intricately detailed steel logs during the day and feel the warmth emitted by our steel log sets when they are lit up at night.

How does your experience as an artist and sculptor influence the design behind the fire pits?

WE ARE ALWAYS STRIVING to create the most life-like fire pits. I am constantly evolving details into our steel log sets to achieve the highest level of realism possible– and I take pride in that.

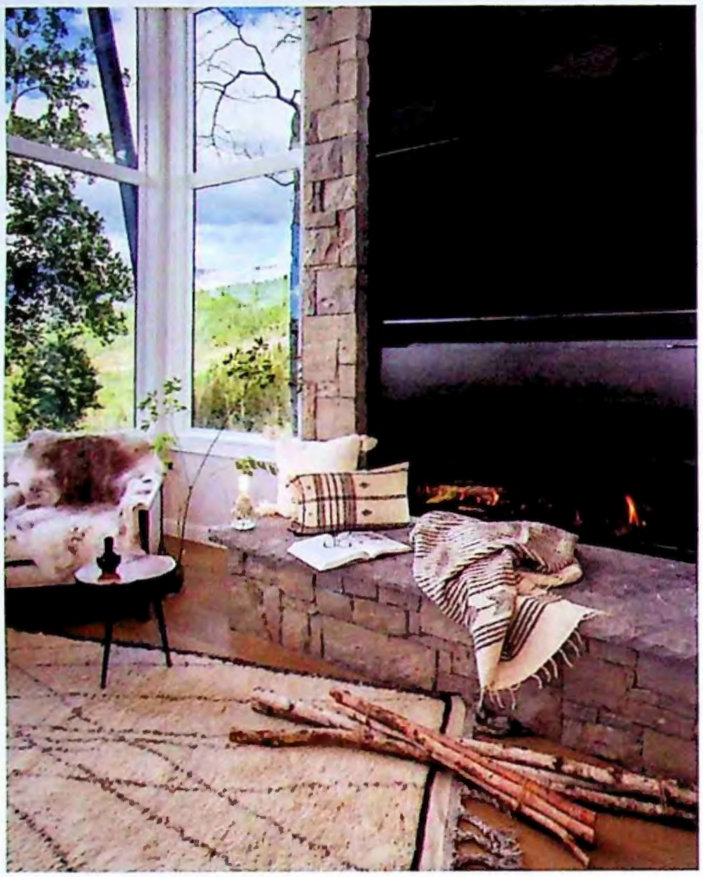
THE TEST OF TIME

A conversation with Sloan Pressly Lehman of TRIBE INTERIOR DESIGN and her thought process behind the classic yet fresh homes she designs.



Describe your design aesthetic with our readers.

MY DESIGN AESTHETIC is an infusion of timeless and warm modernism. Tribe leans towards using tailored lines, unique textiles and organic elements. With the use of antiques alongside contemproary art, this creates a traditional atmosphere with a modern aesthetic.

Are there any specific design elements you're loving right now?

I HAVE ALWAYS GRAVITATED towards a warmer palette, but also enjoy the use of cooler-toned accent colors, such as steel blues or mossy greens. Most recently, what makes me excited is artisan wood furniture, Tuareg mats, Danish-modern furnishings and handmade ceramics.

MODERN MEETS RUSTIC

Durango-based firm, FEATHER & GILL ARCHITECTS, brings 21-years of experience with a little Southwestern flair.

You best describe your firm's architectural style as Southwest revival, with styles ranging from Santa Fe Pueblo to Mountain Modern. What are your favorite aspects of creating residential homes?

WE STRIVE TO ACCOMMODATE unique architectural styles, anything from historic preservation to our client's most challenging vision. Taking a dream and turning it into a home that surpasses the clients' expectations is truly professionally fulfilling.

What can future customers expect when working with you?

OUR FUTURE CLIENTS can expect the same one-on-one experience that Feather & Gill Architects has provided since 1998: truly listening, providing experienced input from both a designer and builder's frame of reference, attending to every detail and always keeping the client's vision in the forefront.

HOME OF THE YEAR 2019

MOUNTAIN LIVING

"This is my very first house," says Baran Tekkora, looking up at a chalet tucked into a snowy hillside and surrounded by majestic pines. "Every time I see it, I get such a thrill." He goes on to explain that he has always lived in apartments—in Turkey as a boy, in the U.S. when he was in college and, now, with his family in an apartment in New York City.

Baran and his wife, Nicole, are avid skiers along with their two very active sons. This was a big consideration when they were looking for property at the Yellowstone Club, with its much-touted access to private powder. "We initially pictured ourselves coming out here in the winter but quickly realized that summers are as much—or even more—fun."

The home they envisioned was simple and inviting but also visually stunning. The family often skis in Europe, and the homeowners were enchanted by the gentle and unmistakable shape of the stone-and-timber mountain chalets that dot Switzerland's high alpine valleys. They wanted the interiors to be airy, light-filled and modern. They were also clear about their desire for a large kitchen, living and dining area—a loft-like gathering space. "Nicole and I knew we would be coming here with family and friends . . . and always lots of kids."

They found a ski-in,ski-out site with striking views of Pioneer and Cedar Mountains and began putting together the team that would make their vision a reality. "They brought a stack of books, historical monographs of European architecture and pages torn from magazines to our very first meeting," recalls Larry Pearson, founding principal of Bozeman-based Pearson Design Group. "We immediately understood what they wanted and were totally on board."

"There is a purity, beauty and simplicity to the alpine chalet style—and at the same time it sheds water and snow efficiently," Pearson explains. European chalet-style homes typically have wide, overhanging eaves under a massive roof, balconies with hand-cut balustrades, and an abundance of wood—inside and out. They have small windows and darker levels of finish to provide a cozy refuge from the weather. >>

Lone Mountain looms tall and large over the gable-within-gable Swiss chalet-inspired home, constructed with reclaimed materials—fir, hemlock and pine. Native moss rock comes from central Montana. Wide overhanging eaves, supported by massive wooden corbels, protect windows and balconies.

"We took something historic and gave it a modern overlay," says Pearson. The Tekkoras' 6,500-square-foot, five-bedroom, five-and-a-half-bathroom home is a Montana interpretation of European sensibility with modern ideas of light, air and, of course, remarkable views. "A traditional chalet doesn't value outdoor spaces like we do in Montana, where we're out-of-doors as much as possible ... in year-round outdoor spaces," says managing principal Justin Tollefson, the project's lead architect. Overhang-protected balconies and the grand patio that runs along the side of the house provide a link to inside and out.

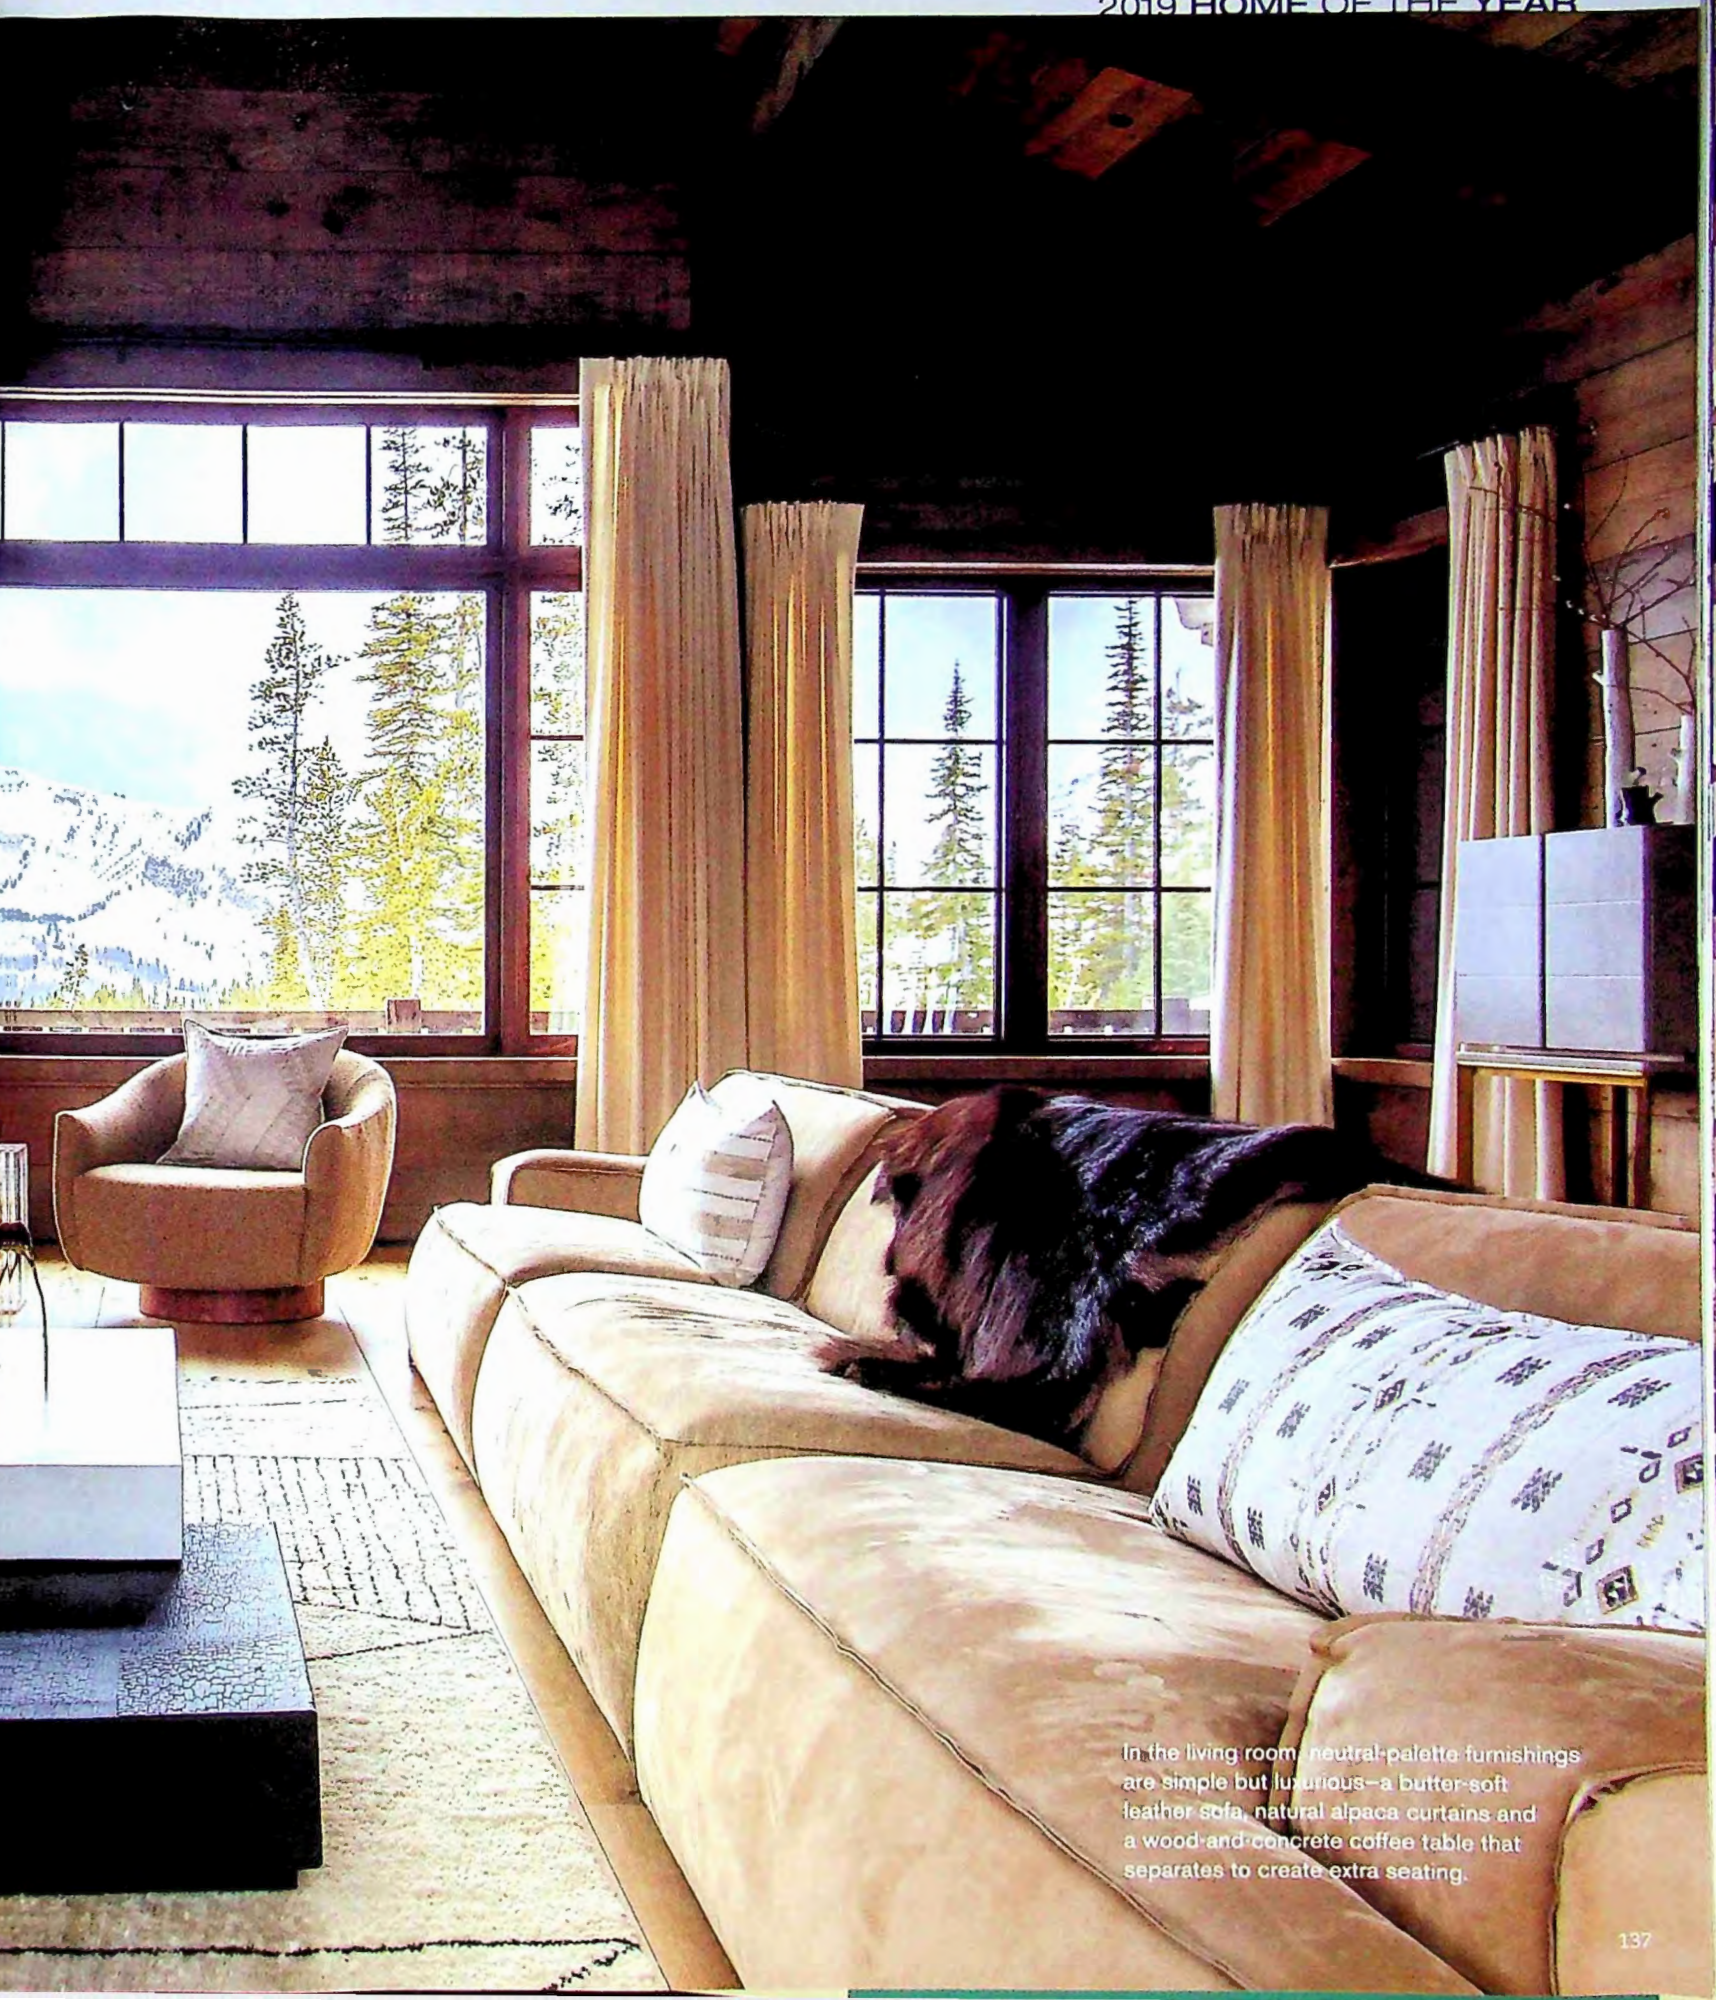
The three-story home not only frames the big views (through triple-glazed windows) from the main room and the master bedrooms but also captures more nuanced views from the guest rooms and balconies. Natural light—sometimes filtered through handwoven curtains—becomes part of the roomscape, providing an interplay of light and shadow as the day turns to night.

Using indigenous and reclaimed materials, typical for mountain chalets in Europe, was important to the homeowners. Bozeman-based On Site Management, tapped to do the construction, has a timber division, an old-wood acquisitions department and a custom cabinet shop. "We spent a lot of time on the selection, treatment and finishing of wood to get the patina just right," says project manager Kyle Surratt. He describes the exterior as fir and hemlock anchored by native Montana moss rock. Inside, the floors are live sawn oak planks and most of the cabinets are reclaimed antique-surfaced oak; the ceiling vaults are reclaimed hemlock. A single pretty-to-look-at staircase of reclaimed oak with hand-cut scrollwork balusters services all three floors. >>

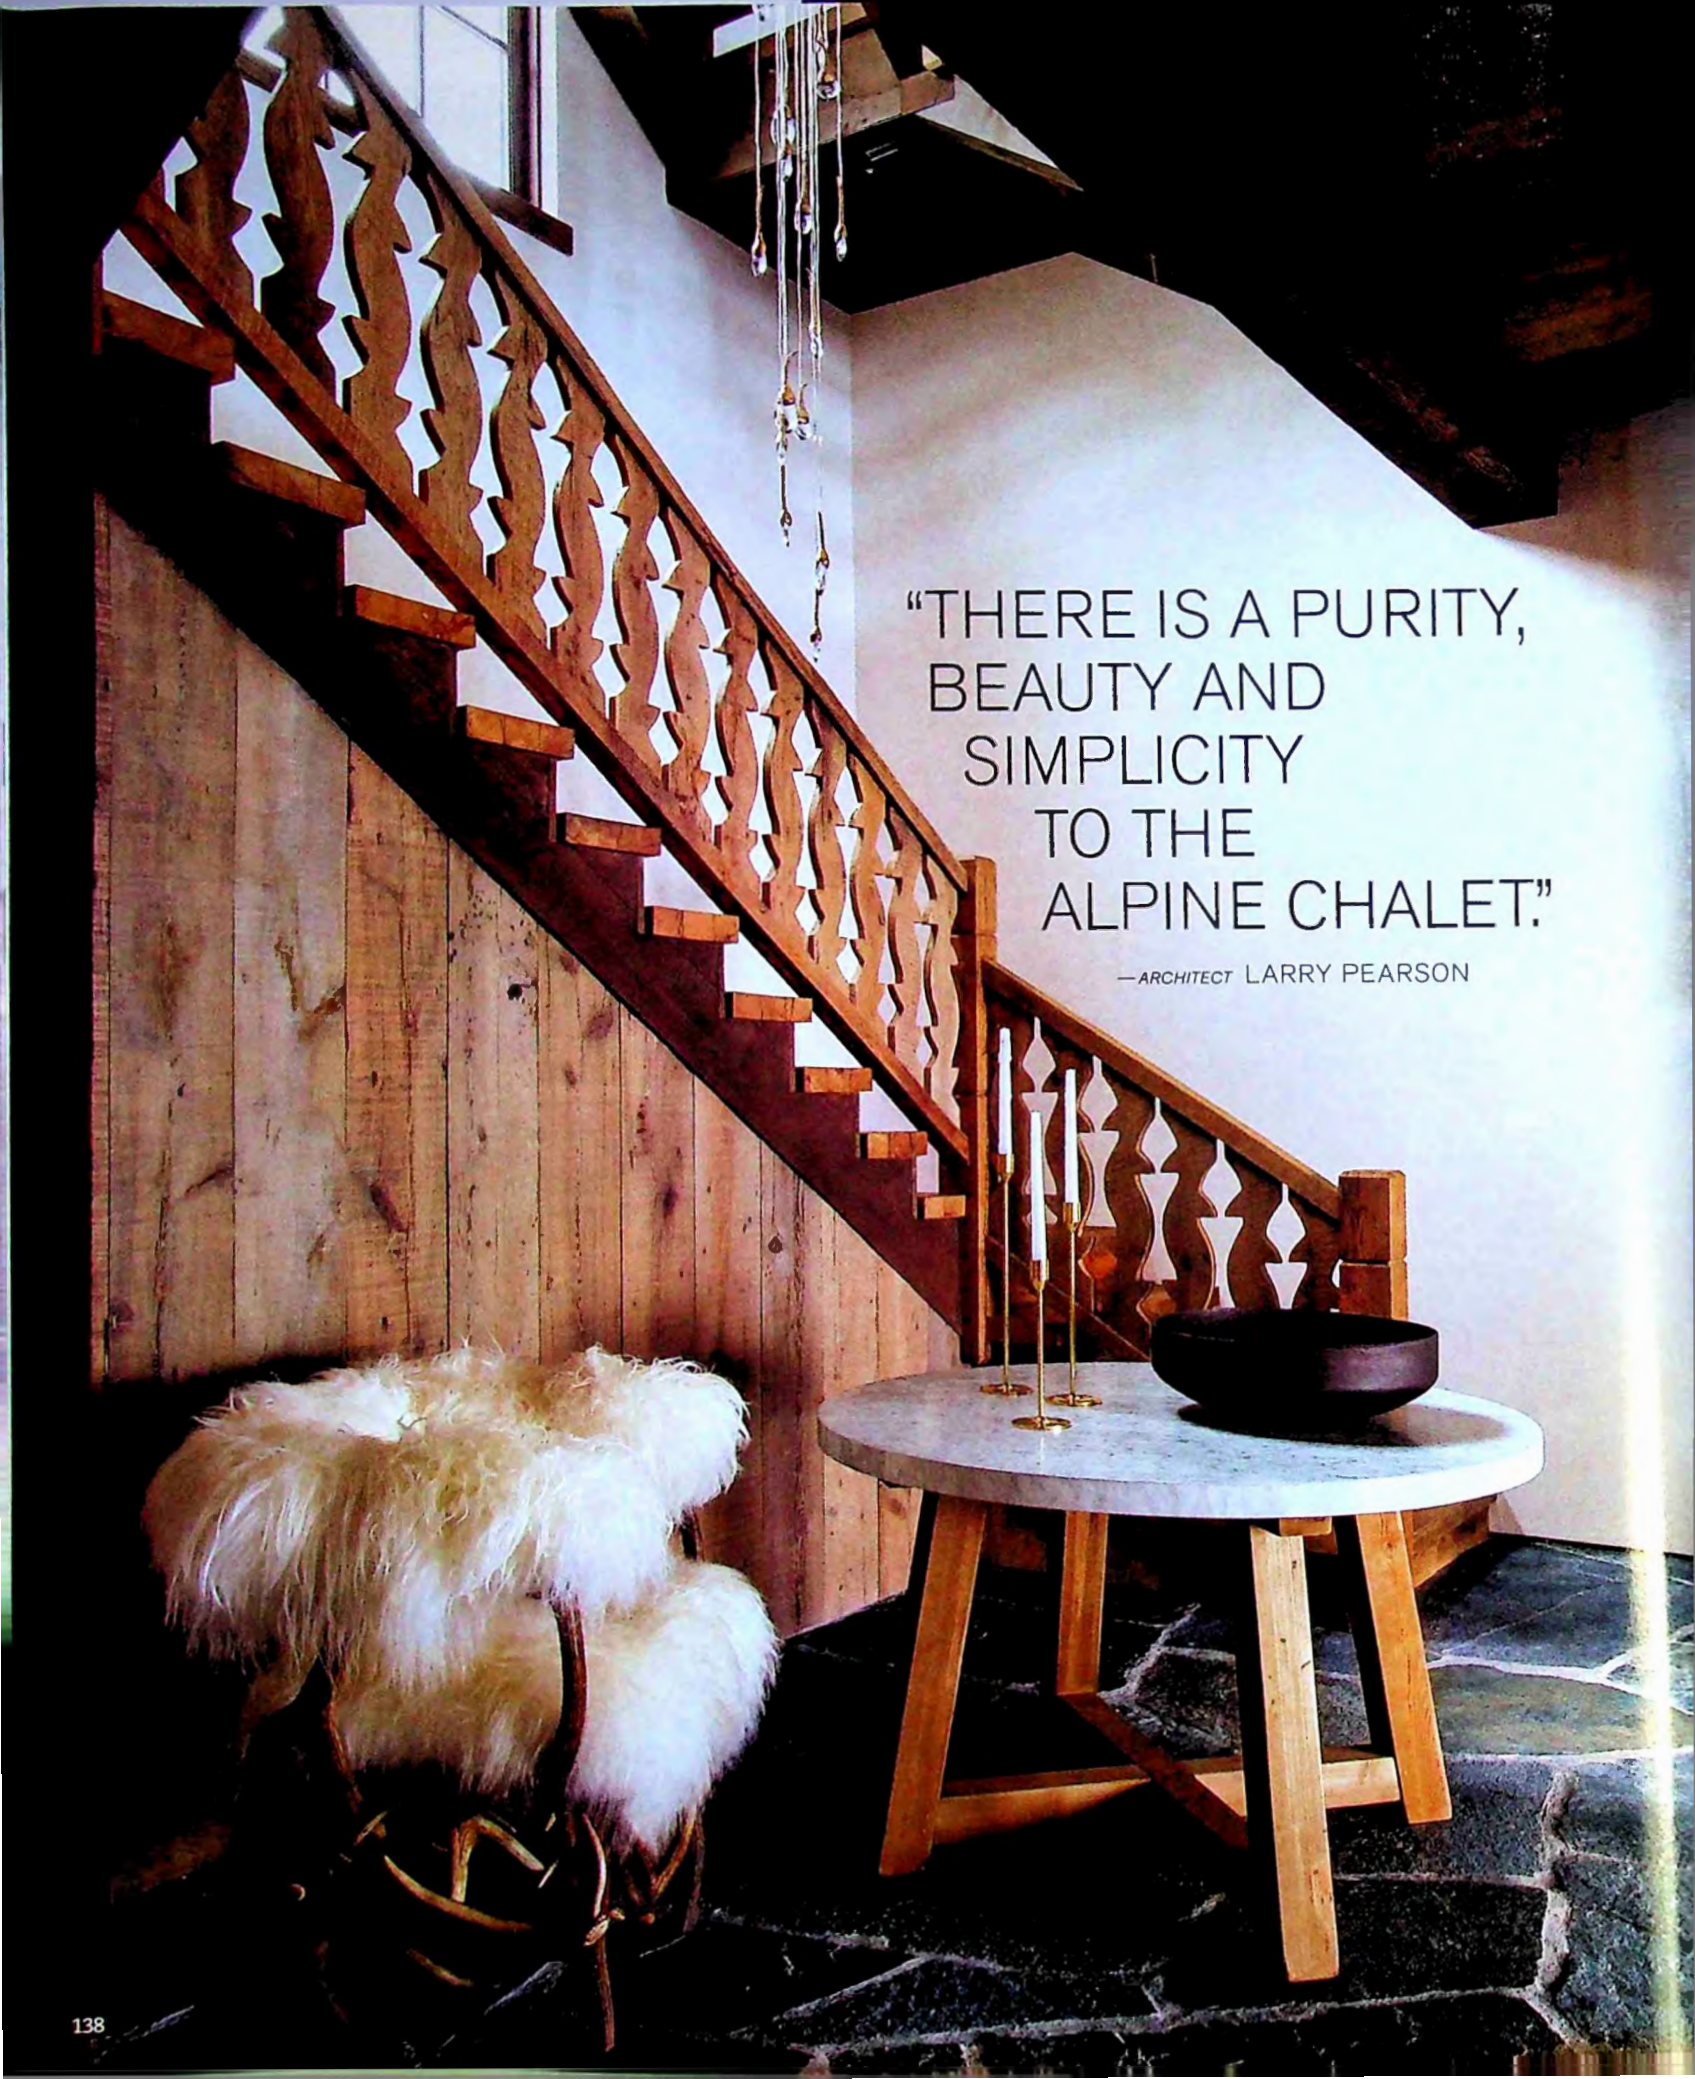
CREATING A CHIC, ORGANICALLY INSPIRED MOUNTAIN HOME

Interior designer Leisa Kolstad of the Pearson Design Group offers these tips and techniques for creating a chic and organically inspired mountain home.

GO EARTHY AND NEUTRAL Choose a color palette that's warm and inviting. Use the indoor colors to mirror what can be seen through the windows—maybe russets, greens, browns and creamy whites. SOFTEN THE HARD SURFACES A home with wide expanses of wooden floors needs style-appropriate area rugs. Wool, mohair, cowhide, jute and sisal are great choices. Frame large windows with textured curtains made of natural fabrics like linen, flax, linen or alpaca. MIX IT UP Straight-line modern furniture pairs well with antiques and soft-under-foot rugs. One ornate piece looks stunning in an otherwise modern room. COMBINE UNLIKELY ELEMENTS OF THE UNEXPECTED Choose an iconic form and have fun with it, maybe re-creating it in an unanticipated medium: antler chandeliers made out of aluminum, for example, an antler chair upholstered in ultra-modern fabric or an oh-so-Western cow skull made out of cast glass.



In the living room, neutral-palette furnishings are simple but luxurious—a butter-soft leather sofa, natural alpaca curtains and a wood-and-concrete coffee table that separates to create extra seating.



"THERE IS A PURITY, BEAUTY AND SIMPLICITY TO THE ALPINE CHALET."
—ARCHITECT LARRY PEARSON

Two coats of lime plaster were skimmed onto the walls and set up a contrast with the tonality of the old wood. Juxtaposing richly patinated materials against lighter, more reflective materials creates pleasing energy and vibrancy. "How you work with the contrast to highlight each of the materials ... that's the fundamental dance," says Pearson.

"Rustic bones with a modern aesthetic" is how Leisa Kolstad, Pearson Design Group's in-house interior designer, describes the home. "The rooms flow into each other in a way that's both calm and dynamic," she adds.

Kolstad chose a color palette that's both earthy and neutral and provides a counterpoint to the light plaster walls and interior wood. She favors organic shapes (like the dramatic teak-root console in the entry), bold forms and laid-back-luxe textures to soften the hard surfaces. In the staircase area, for example, she paired a blown-glass chandelier that "glows softly at night" with a vintage antler chair upholstered in longhair Mongolian shearling.

The main room, which is the essence of simplicity, is the most exciting room in the house. A large limestone fireplace anchors >>

"EVERY TIME I SEE IT,

I GET SUCH A THRILL."

— HOMEOWNER BARAN TEKKORA

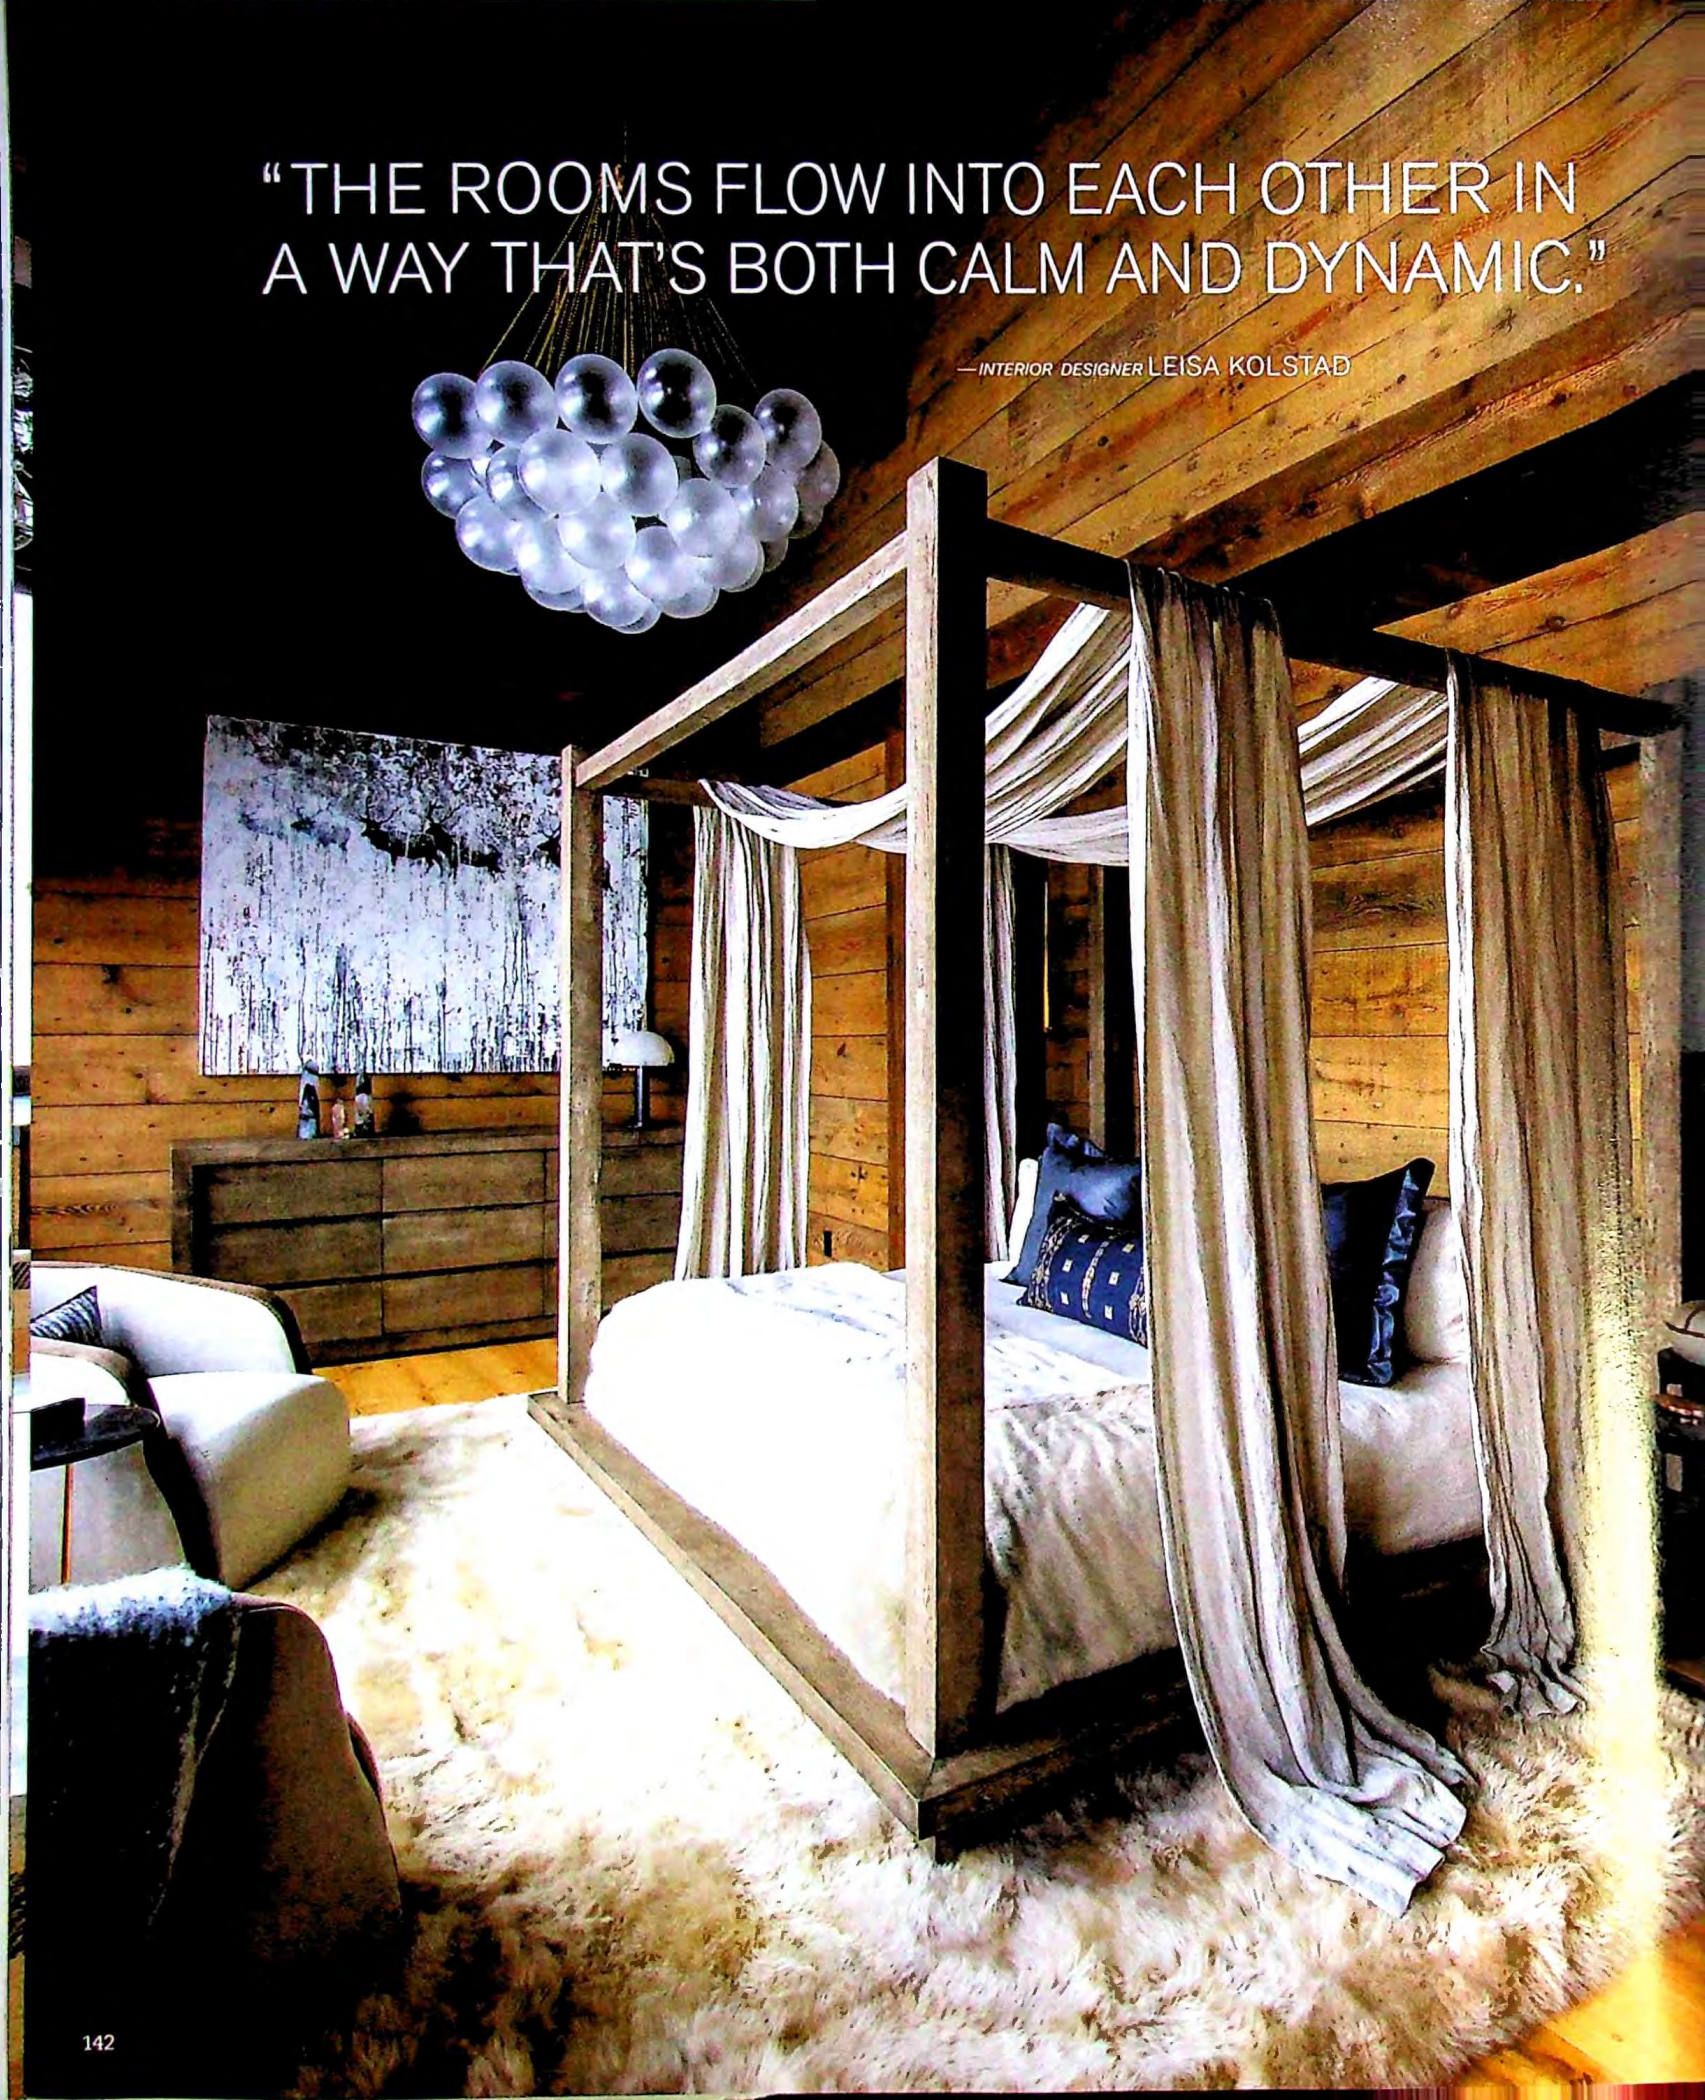
In the kitchen and dining area: dark concrete countertops, reclaimed wood cupboards, a handblown "raindrop" chandelier, a whitewashed, highly polished maple-slab dining table. "An oval table is more inviting for conversation," says interior designer Leisa Kolstad.



"THE ROOMS FLOW INTO EACH OTHER IN A WAY THAT'S BOTH CALM AND DYNAMIC."
—INTERIOR DESIGNER LEISA KOLSTAD

the space. Hung over the fireplace—yes, antlers; but, unexpectedly, made of glass and so subtle in color that "you don't see them until you get closer and are actually in the room," says Kolstad. Completing the décor are Italian sofas covered with butter-soft leather, soft alpaca curtains and a massive reclaimed timber console that separates the living and dining rooms. The wood-and-concrete, five-piece coffee table is modular. It works a little like a jigsaw puzzle and can be moved apart to create more seating or nestled to create more space.

The home is not only beautiful but carefully planned to be useful for future generations. Architectural plans include the possibility of adding an elevator. "The Tekkoras were very thoughtful and anticipated what their life would look like in 20 years," says Pearson Designs Group's Tollefson.

Baran Tekkora agrees: "We wanted a simple but handsome home that we could enjoy for many years before passing it on to our kids." He goes on to compliment the architecture and design team by saying that this, his first home, is even more beautiful than he originally imagined.

CALL OF THE WILD

A Florida couple collaborates with an Atlanta-based designer and many local craftsmen to revitalize a dated house in Big Sky, Montana

Punctuated by the occasional rise in pitch, the rhythmic cadence of an old-fashioned auctioneer is something to behold. That was the scene on a snowy winter day in Big Sky, Montana, when a small group, among them David and Cameron Given, gathered to bid on a chalet-like house on a secluded lot at the Yellowstone Club.

After a tense, rapid-fire round of bidding, the couple's final competitor dropped out, and with a bang of his gavel the auctioneer shouted out that timeworn phrase. "Going once, going twice, whoa," Cameron recalls. "It was wild."

Perhaps it's an apt way to buy a home in a region of the country known for its abundant wildlife. The couple sometimes spy bears, moose and elk in the woods behind their place—a far cry from their residences in Seattle and Florida. Fortunately, renovating their home with interior designer William "Bill" Peace and builder Rob McRae and Allison Roberts of Highline Partners was as collaborative as the auction was competitive.

During the first phase of the project, Peace set out to modernize the dated interior finishes, staining the exposed hand-peeled log structural beams and tongue-and-groove ceiling in a far darker hue inspired by the color of the trees behind the house. Newly plastered walls add contrast, depth and richness. "They wanted a fresher, updated approach," Peace says.

In its new context, the living room's stone fireplace takes on a whole new life—a warm and rustic focal point for a cozy sitting area with contemporary clean-lined seating around an antique Italian cocktail table. An armless daybed separates the space into two distinct sitting areas without interfering with the majestic vistas. "The palette was inspired by tones that you see in the mountains," Peace explains, referencing the textured fabrics and accessories.

The setting also influenced the art pieces that Peace helped the couple acquire. An abstracted landscape depicting wild horses by Theodore Waddell hangs above the living room fireplace, and a large encaustic painting of a wolf by Theresa Stirling brings the great outdoors into the front foyer. "People come to Montana to be outside, but they also need shelter," Peace says. "We created something that complements the exterior."

In the same vein, a mounted elk rack adds a sculptural element above the wall-to-wall upholstered bed in the master suite, where a tactile wallcovering, a sumptuous area rug and soft >>

BLENDING ANTIQUES AND CONTEMPORARY PIECES SUCCESSFULLY

Antiques and new furnishings elevate one another in this Montana manse. "We were after a balance of elegance, traditional and modern, and bringing in antiques from Robuck in special areas really gave us the opportunity to do that," says interior designer Bill Peace. Here's how he did it:

INCORPORATE PIECES THAT MAKE A STATEMENT In the living room, Peace paired new furnishings with an Italian wooden cocktail table and an antique desk that was a family heirloom. "It's important in a house like this that it doesn't feel like everything was bought in a single afternoon, that there is a collected feeling," Peace says. CREATE A NEW CONTEXT Paired with a sleek nickel sink, an antique Italian cabinet becomes a bespoke vanity for an elegant powder room with a silver and gold-leafed faux bois wallcovering and luxurious finishes. USE IT OR LOSE IT A tall 18th-century walnut cabinet in the front entry makes a terrific spot for storage while adding a sense of history to the mountain abode. According to Peace, the mix of contemporary clean-lined furnishings with select antiques works very well in the rustic milieu. "This home has depth and richness," he says. "There's a romance about it."

draperies create an enveloping milieu. In the corner, a wing chair with silver-leafed detailing invites reading and contemplation. "We didn't want it to feel too Western or cliched in any way," Peace says. "There's an elegance about this home that's simple and understated."

In the second phase of the project, the team tackled the home's exterior, replacing the original siding with reclaimed wood. "In this day and age, when people literally annihilate homes and start over, it was exciting to repurpose what was there," say builder McRae, who also built David's first home in the area many years earlier.

One item remained on David and Cameron's proverbial punch list months after the project ended: naming their house, a tradition in the area. Then a friend made the perfect suggestion: "Call of the Wild," a nod to the classic Jack London book. David and Cameron certainly feel called to the region, skiing, golfing and breaking bread with some of the best friends they've ever had.

In fact, they have become friends with a couple who bid against them for the house right down to the wire. What accounts for the live-and-let-live attitude? Maybe it's those jaw-dropping views. "They call it Big Sky for a reason," Cameron says. "Montana makes me feel peaceful, appreciative and open. It's spectacular."

Somewhere in between running two law practices, tending to four children—including 4-year-old twins, and splitting their time between Miami, Tuscany and Aspen, Julian and William Charouhis have a passion for home development. "We've done six turnkey properties, all in Florida," shares Julian, whose enviable energy level is akin to that bunny in the battery ads. "Bill works directly with the architect and builder, and I handle the interior design." Accordingly, the decision to build an Aspen, Colorado, retreat was just another day in the life for the busy couple, who after finding that sweet-spot property—endless views and only seven minutes from town—used their combined knowledge to collaborate with architect Seth Hmielowski, of Z Group Architects, to create their mountain getaway.

The sprawling structure encompassing panoramic views of the Elk Mountain Range that Hmielowski delivered was perfectly in sync with the couple's vision for a mountain contemporary home. "The architecture is meant to be very open and provide connectivity with nature," says Hmielowski, noting that in lieu of damaging excavation they sliced into the hillside to merge the structure into the land. "And you are always walking next to natural materials," he adds about the honed limestone, expanses of glass and rough-cut Telluride stone that define much of the materials palette and bond the modern building to its impressive surroundings.

Accessed by a long driveway, the home's entry sequence keeps visitors guessing about what lies beyond the punched openings in the massive stone walls visible on approach. "On the first bend you get a glimpse, but the house blocks the views," says Hmielowski, who continued the tease inside with a sculpture composed of hollowed-out wood logs, found by the homeowners and strategically placed to obscure and further delay the wow moment. When the full majesty of the landscape is finally revealed, the architect's decision to dub the project Elysium—a moniker suggesting a place of bliss or delight—makes perfect sense.

Meanwhile the sparseness of a cowhide bench and the whimsy of a Kenneth Cobonpue chandelier composed of hundreds of miniature metal people hint at the clean-lined design style within. In the living room, for example, sleek 14-foot Gamma Arredamenti gray suede sofas blend seamlessly with the like-colored limestone walls while exposing the homeowner's affection for all things Italian. "I am partial to Italian furnishings, particularly for leathers and suedes," says Julian, whose polished instincts come from years of studying masters of design. In the >> Limestone and granite walls ground the house within its dramatic 38-acre surroundings bordering Brush Creek and Wildcat in Aspen.

WARMING UP

No amount of huffing and puffing will blow down the substantial granite, limestone and glass Aspen mountain home designed by architect Seth Hmielowski. But after a hard day of skiing no one wants to return to a place that even when the heat is on reads as cold. Hmielowski took these steps to ensure the ambient temperature stays up even when the snow falls. MIX IT UP Multiple colors and a rough texture take the edge off otherwise cold granite. WOODWORKS Wood overhangs outside continue on the ceilings inside, providing a warm contrast to the stone walls. TOASTY TOES "Concrete is a cold surface for floors, but with radiant heat they feel great on bare feet all winter," Hmielowski says. LIGHT IT UP Come nightfall, windows go dark and the temperature drops. Up lighting and down lighting cast a glow on the textured granite, highlighting its nuances, while warming the cool gray limestone.

family room the combination of armchairs wrapped in steel-blue leather and a putty-toned suede sectional take an intentional back seat to the formidable backdrop. "I wanted soft colors that would not in any way detract from the incredible views," she adds.

For interior finishes like kitchen cabinetry and wood paneling Julıean turned to Marcel Menegolla, whose Armazem showrooms in Miami and Chicago specialize in custom cabinetry, for advice. "For the kitchen and butler's pantry we explored a combination of matte white lacquer and grayish brown oak with a touch of smoked glass and brushed metal," says Menegolla, who has worked with the homeowners on other projects. "We felt it was a great combo to go against the polished concrete floors." His selection of darker brown oak to flank the headboard in the master suite melds with the room's soothing gray tones.

Thanks to generous fenestration, almost all the living spaces benefit from an intentional in-your-face relationship with the outdoors—most notably in the kitchen, where the glass doors disappear and effectively place the gathering space in the landscape. "The retractable walls open the home to the mountain air," says Hmielowski, adding, "Throughout the house, boundaries between the living and outdoor spaces blur with the surroundings and create a visceral luxury mountain experience."

A Texas family creates a dog-friendly Colorado retreat that's elegant yet fun

Fortunately, some folks just refuse to accept defeat. When the East Texas-based owners of this splendid Colorado getaway missed the chance to buy a different place in Avon's Mountain Star community ("It was the most beautiful home we've ever seen," the homeowner recalls), they might have simply given up. But instead, they went to work and enlisted the exact same team who had built that place—architect, contractor and interior designer—to reunite and create another home just for their own family.

"We called it the dream team," the homeowner explains, "and we said, we'll just hire them." So, the capable, local crew—consisting of architect Brian Judge, founding principal of Vail's Judge + Associates; Viele Construction; and interior designer Dana Hugo, of J&o studio—came back together to tackle the new project on a nearby site overlooking Beaver Creek and Bachelor Gulch.

The husband-and-wife owners are both pilots, and they try to visit—along with their 12-year-old daughter—as often as their busy schedules allow. Since they often host family and friends, the home was expressly designed to suit their casual, convivial mountain lifestyle. "We made it clear that we wanted what we call grown-up rooms," the homeowner says. "We wanted king-size beds everywhere, and we didn't want adults having to share bathrooms."

So, Judge cleverly conceived the home as a series of pods. "The home was broken into three major pods: the master, living and guest pods," he explains, "each oriented toward unique site opportunities and connected via bridges." The strategically placed structural elements maximize the home's stunning alpine views while also following the steep, forested contours of the lot. "The bridge-and-pod concepts were clearly the solution, allowing the home to curve and integrate into the corners of the terrain," Judge says. The home's mountain-contemporary style plays out in a large-scale application of Oklahoma sandstone, zinc, steel and glass, creating continuity between the exterior and interiors.

When Hugo approached the project, she knew she wouldn't only be designing for the home's human residents. The homeowners love their dogs, and keeping them happy was a priority. "We told her that we don't really care what you get [for furnishings], but just know there's probably going to be a dog on it at some point," the homeowner admits.

She laughs when she explains how differently she and her husband feel about home design. "My husband would probably >>

IN LIVING COLOR

A lightning bolt of bold color can really zap a space into life. But knowing how to achieve a sophisticated balance without going gaudy can be daunting. Designer Dana Hugo offers some expert tips:

START GRADUALLY With neutral backgrounds, add color in pillows, throws, area rugs, cube stools or even books and flowers. Start with just one or two items to make sure you like it. CONSIDER SCALE In large rooms, upholster one BIG piece in the center of the room—daybed, coffee table, ottoman. BAM! Instant impact. LOOK UP Don't ignore ceilings—paint them, wallpaper them, add texture and colors and even wood or tin. PAPER POWER Hugo loves wallpaper—especially textured and large prints. "I'm currently into doing bright murals (graffiti or florals) on accent walls," she says. BLACK-AND-WHITE BACKGROUND Any bold color is complimentary with black and white! GRAPHIC PATTERNS Paint walls with bold stripes (horizontal, vertical or diagonal) or large polka dots—really fun for kids' spaces and bunk rooms.

CLOCKWISE FROM TOP, LEFT: Holly Hunt barstools, upholstered in apple green leather from Moore & Giles, brighten up the clean-lined kitchen. A pair of Ralph Lauren chaises for lounging in the entry. have done everything in beige, and he thinks you shouldn't really ever have to redecorate," she says. "And I want things that are memorable and fun." Hugo gladly accepted the challenge, creating neutral, soft-textured backdrops for each room's bright sparks of color, and choosing furnishings she describes as "square, and clean-lined—a modern version of traditional." The result is a bold, never boring, blend. "The guest pod is done with oranges, and the rest of the house flows with the blues and greens, which helps bring the outdoors in—the beautiful aspen trees and the Colorado blue skies," Hugo explains. As another nod to the high-country climate, the team installed an oxygen system to help guests avoid altitude sickness.

Now that the home is finished just the way they wanted, the family is proud to finally welcome friends. "The house lends itself to making everyone feel comfortable no matter who you are, no matter where you live, or how you live at home," the homeowner explains. "I never thought I would consider myself a mountain person, and it just feels like home," she says. "The first time I walk in the door from being gone a little while . . ." she pauses, and then continues with a laugh, "my first exhale feels incredible."

Classic meets contemporary in a California family's inviting vacation home in Big Sky, Montana

For a Bay Area investment professional who met his wife on a ski trip to Tahoe 18 years ago—and eventually had three children who also love to hit the slopes—a personal ski retreat was the ultimate aspiration. "We had the vision of one day having a ski house where we could take our kids," he says. "We spent time traveling all over the western U.S. sampling different areas with the idea of picking one for our family over the long term." When the couple found a private three-acre lot at Montana's Yellowstone Club that was perched at over 8,000 feet elevation and offered sweeping mountain views, they knew it was time to make their dream a reality.

To help them bring their vision to life, the homeowners enlisted Greg Dennee of Locati Architects, builder Rob McRae of Highline Partners and their go-to California interior designer, Kendall Wilkinson. The four-year collaborative effort resulted in an 11,000-square-foot mountain getaway that mixes modern touches with classic forms. "The clients really wanted the house to have roots in the traditional ski lodge aesthetic but have an unexpected contemporary feel," says Dennee, who paired a time-honored gable roof design with less conventional floor-to-ceiling glass. "Modern doesn't have to be severe, it can be comfortable. In this home, we were able to strike the balance between something that does feel overtly modern but still has a relaxed quality to it."

The mix of materials in the home also required a deft touch from the architect. Composed primarily of steel, stone and reclaimed timber, the house could have ended up feeling dark and heavy, but instead it's cheerful and welcoming throughout. By exposing the steel trusses in the ceiling of the kitchen, family room and great room, for instance, Dennee created an airy effect as well as visual interest overhead. "You can wood a home to death," he says, "and the homeowners were really sensitive to that. They wanted the home to feel light and bright."

The dwelling's most dramatic feature, however, is the corner-to-corner glass that lets in panoramic views of Montana's famous sky, trees and Sphinx and Pioneer Mountains. For interior designer Wilkinson and her design principal, Kristin Rowell, those views were the driving force behind all of their design decisions. "When you have the kind of view they have, you want to bring the outdoors in," says Wilkinson. To achieve that goal, the duo started with a neutral palette of grays and creams accented with pops of green and blue to honor the surrounding nature. The designers were also careful with the scale and proportion of furnishings and light fixtures, ensuring that nothing would distract from the picturesque scenes visible from every room. →

Throughout the house, architect Greg Dennee brought the outside in by using the same materials inside and out. At the entry, for example, he allowed the Montana moss rock on the exterior to carry directly through to the interior.

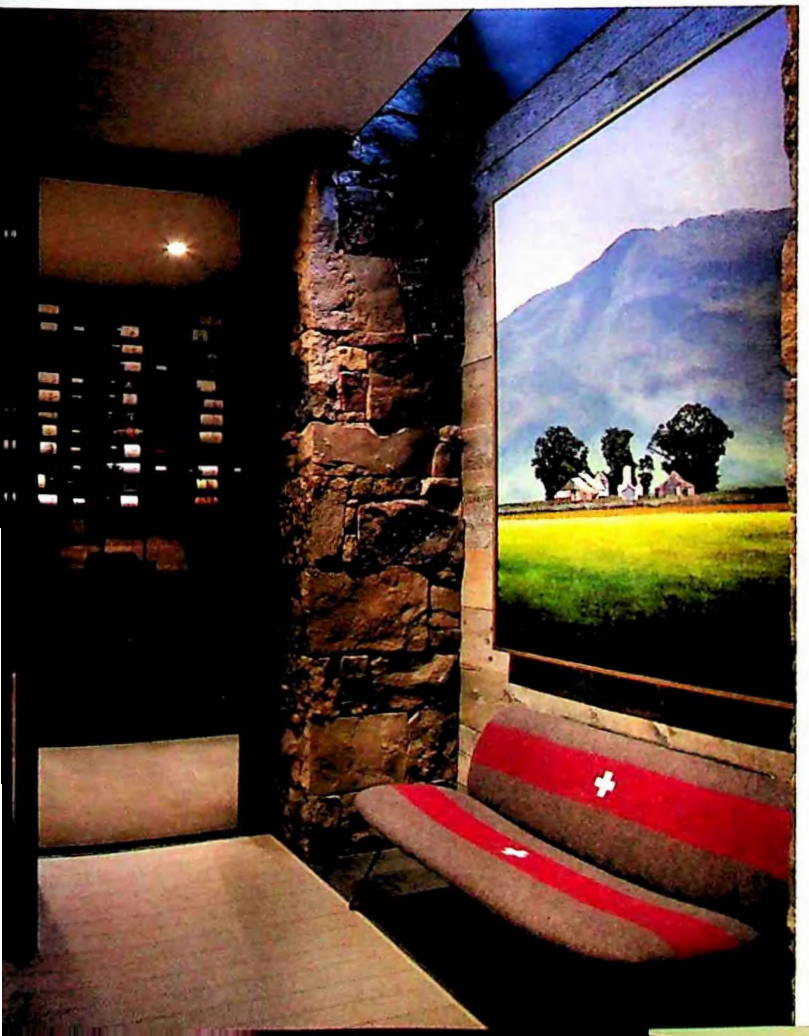
A PLACE FOR ALL

"When you have a vacation home, there are a lot of guests in and out," says interior designer Kendall Wilkinson. "These homeowners are very close to their extended family, so the idea was how to make it intimate for the five of them but also accommodate 20 people."

USE SPACE WISELY In the kitchen, the design team opted for an L-shaped island, which allowed for extra seating when needed as well as additional cabinet space. PLAN FOR EXPANSION Multifunctional furnishings are critical when there's a crowd. The dining room table, for example, has leaves for both ends (meaning no pesky seam in the middle), and it can be extended to seat up to 18 people. CHOOSE FAMILY-FRIENDLY FABRICS In addition to their frequent visitors, the homeowners have a 6-year-old daughter and twin 8-year-old sons, so the high-traffic home was also designed with kids in mind. "Indoor-outdoor fabrics are hugely important," Wilkinson says, "and there are so many different lines." She recommends Perennials textiles as well as her own line for Fabricut, both of which are known for their durability and stain resistance.

ABOVE: Two Lindsey Adelman light fixtures hang in the dining room, which offers spectacular views of Sphinx Mountain. RIGHT: The great room's cozy seating arrangement includes Holly Hunt sofas upholstered in Rosemary Hallgarten fabric and a pair of Kimberly Denman swivel chairs. The custom Perigee chandeliers, made of matte-black metal and handblown glass, are by Debra Weninger.

"MODERN DOESN'T HAVE TO BE SEVERE; IT CAN BE COMFORTABLE."
—ARCHITECT GREG DENNEE



To maintain the cozy feeling of the home's expansive spaces, Wilkinson and Rowell added layers of texture (think wool rugs, cotton pillows, velvet sofas and fur-covered stools) and finished with a little bit of luster. "Shine is really important, and I don't think you should get shine in fabrics or too much in the furniture," Wilkinson says. "The shine comes with the lighting." The starting point for the designers' decorative lighting choices were the custom chandeliers in the great room and family room. Designed by artisan Debra Weninger, a relative of the homeowners, the sculptural fixtures feature a series of handblown glass spheres that add the luminosity Wilkinson so appreciates.

The fact that the homeowners chose a family member to create such prominent pieces is rather appropriate for a house meant to be an all-season vacation spot for their children and them as well as their extended family. With seven bedrooms and the capacity to sleep up to 24 people, the home has room for friends and kin alike. "This is the dream for our family for decades to come," says the homeowner. "It's a place where we'll always gather and come back to."

2019 PEAK AWARD

CONGRATULATIONS FROM ALL OF US AT ML!

Mountain Living had the honor of judging the Peak Award for this year's Summit County Parade of Homes. This award recognizes the highest level of excellence in high-country home design. Architecture, interior design, innovation and landscaping were all taken into consideration. This year, we presented the Mountain Living Peak Award to Pinnacle Mountain Homes for their work on 1067 Discovery Hill Drive in Breckenridge.

WINNER OF THE 2019 PEAK AWARD

1067 DISCOVERY HILL DRIVE

This five-bedroom, six-bathroom home perches at the peak of the coveted Highlands neighborhood overlooking the Breckenridge Golf Club. Coined as "mod-dustrial," by the owners, the home's design blends natural elements, industrial features and contemporary lines. The eight-foot, custom walnut and steel front door opens to reveal a spacious foyer that flows into the kitchen, dining and living spaces. A three-tier flagstone patio wraps the corner dining space and includes a hot tub, firepit and panoramic views of the Ten Mile Mountain Range.

INTERVIEW LAURA BEAUSIRE

A Spirit Place

THE ARTIST
Jane Rosen

BIRD WATCHING
"Growing up, I would go every week to the Metropolitan Museum, and I'd sit in the Egyptian wing and look at these amazing stone carvings of Horus, the Sun God. And that's the main reason my birds are posted; he was the highest god and he was that which could see both in and out simultaneously."

THE CALL OF CALIFORNIA
"I was going back to New York—I was on a sabbatical and I had a fairly good career in New York—and this red-tailed hawk circled over my head, and I could hear him saying, 'Stay here, tell my story.' And I thought, well, okay."

THE MAGIC OF NATURE
"To me, this is a spirit place. And it's so worth it, because what you're given is an ability to participate actively with the quiet. It feels like you have to slow down from domestic time in order to live in landscape time, and that magic will reveal itself to you."

EVOLUTION THROUGH GLASS
"Glass has just changed my life. It's a glorious alchemy working in the materials—the sand to molten liquid, the heat, the layers—all reiterating the complexity of growth in nature."

SHARING THE LESSONS OF THE LAND
"I've been given this extraordinary life. I want to share what I see when that posted hawk is sitting there in late afternoon sun; glowing, watching, silent. Because if people saw what I saw, they wouldn't kill it. They wouldn't cut down the trees; they wouldn't poison the land."

NEXT
The Gail Severn Gallery in Ketchum, Idaho, will include Rosen's work in Past as Prologue, December 20, 2019, to January 31, 2020, and will host a solo show of her drawings and sculptures in August 2020.
